Pasta, Amore e Fantasia

Article and photos by Ben & Glinda Shipley

In 1969, a good friend named Robbie dropped out of New York University and vanished from the social scene. Nothing unusual about that in those rootless, peripatetic days—except for the shocker two years later, when we ran into him sitting in a café in the Communist quarter of Florence, Italy, reading a book and sipping on a glass of Grappa. Such are the vagaries of travel in the modern age—or so it felt—that we all seem to end up where we're supposed to be.

As it happened, Robbie had just started the first Montessori school in Italy north of Rome. His Open House for parents and friends was scheduled for that evening. Did we want to come? Well, obviously. So we went and, as usual at such parties, ended up in the kitchen, where the real action always is. That night, the action was a petite, attractive Florentine sous-chef, graduated that year from Le Cordon Bleu Paris, who offered to teach us how to make an authentic Tuscan spaghetti sauce.

Decades later, we befriended a purchasing agent at one of the major Hollywood studios. Sam had frittered away his youth on the rougher edges of society, losing himself to drugs and violence with the Hells Angels. Yet no matter how ugly his circumstances, on the first Thursday of each month, Sam showed up for a Neapolitan feast his father, a first-generation Italian, cooked for the first eighteen relatives to reserve a seat. When Papa passed on, a more mature and settled Sam found a job and took over the family and this responsibility.

The heart of Sam's feast was a classic Neapolitan spaghetti sauce based strictly on tomatoes grown in the ashes of Mount Vesuvius, the brooding volcano across the harbor from downtown Naples. When we told Sam about our own family connection to that ancient, unstable neighborhood, he broke with the firmest of traditions and handed over the "secret" family recipe.

Some people eat to live, and some people live to eat. Some people can't stop wandering, and some people never leave home. But it's impossible to separate food from travel. Think of that every time you twirl a fork-load of spaghetti—a food we associate with a distant land like Italy, that actually arrived there from a much farther China, in 1493, in the luggage of Marco Polo. Even if you never leave your kitchen, the foods you cook and eat have traveled since the dawn of civilization.

The Tuscan Sauce:

If you order pasta Bolognese anywhere from Siena north to Bologna, this is more or less what you'll be eating. Keep that in mind if your twelve-year-old has grown up on American restaurant spaghetti—this sauce won't taste the same to them. We don't use the name here, because in America, "Bolognese" has evolved to mean just about any meat-tomato-based sauce with "Italian" seasonings. Surprisingly enough, this Tuscan sauce is the quickest and simplest of our two favorites.

2 lbs. beef, 1 lb. pork, 1 lb. veal, separately ground or (if you have the time) chopped.

Equal parts beef stock (1 can approx.), red wine, and chopped fresh Roma tomatoes.

1 large onion, 1 bell pepper, 1 box mushrooms, 1 head (not a misprint!) garlic, all chopped.

The Whispering Dead by Darcy Coates

By Roz Templin,
El Segundo Public Library

There are a LOT of paranormal fiction books out there: paranormal mysteries, thrillers ... even paranormal and extraterrestrial romances! Here's one that I truly enjoyed, that might hook you (and, oh joy, it's the first of a new series!). The Whispering Dead introduces an amnesiac heroine, who discovers she can see and hear ghosts. Conveniently for her, after landing in a little village called Blighty, after being pursued by unknown assailants, she winds up in a cottage beside a graveyard.

Keira can't remember much but her name when she turns up in an injured and much-bedraggled state at the doorstep of Pastor Adage. He takes her in, binds her wounds, feeds her stew and becomes her support as she tries to figure out her past.

While familiarizing herself with the town, she makes new friends: Zoe, the conspiracy theory "specialist" and Mason, the mysterious medical student who casts a romantic glow in Keira's eyes. These three form an unlikely trio of sleuths when Keira's investigation of a local murder takes a dangerous turn of events for all.

Although it seems Keira's memories have been wiped clean, during her stay in Blighty she discovers several things about herself: She has keen self defense skills, a considerable tolerance to pain and by exerting some pressure on a "muscle" behind her eye, she can see and hear the dead. A particular spirit, Emma Carthage, makes an impression on Keira and she decides she will pursue every avenue to put her to rest. In addition to Zoe and Mason, there's a sweet stray cat that befriends her and may turn out to be somewhat supernatural as well.

This story is like a grown-up version of an old Nancy Drew mystery, fun and a pretty quick read. Not all of Keira's questions are answered here (although she does find out that she prefers tea to coffee,) so it's good that this new series ("Gravekeeper") will return with the second installment next year.

Author Darcy Coates has been quite prolific in horror fiction, and we have quite a few of her other novels in stock - maybe I'll try another!

Visit the library for this and many more choices in every reading genre you can imagine. Our friendly staff members will be happy to guide you to both classics and up-to-the-minute releases. •

Film Review

If You Haven't Seen Any of Asghar Farhadi's Films, Start With 'A Hero'

By Ryan Rojas, Cinemacy

I'll admit, I hadn't seen a film by Iranian director Asghar Farhadi before watching his newest film, A Hero.

I guess the only positive thing that I can say to that is, without having seen any of his other movies to date, I was able to watch his newest film with eyes anew (hey, we're all here to continuously discover new films, aren't we?).

Although, it is particularly embarrassing that I (a film critic) am just now seeing my first of Farhadi's films, an accomplished director who has won the Oscar for Best Foreign Language a plan to attempt to settle his debt.

Fabricating a story of goodwill that is picked up by the local media, Rahim instantly turns into an overnight hero in his community. However, just as soon as his fame has risen, cracks in his charitable story start to emerge threatening his reputation, and his plans of freedom.

What makes A Hero such a great film—which it is—is that it's not a movie that lets you easily pass judgment or ascribe labels on people or their motives. Rahim may sound like a calculating, contemptuous figure, but what Farhad adds in his excellently written script

Film twice, for A Separation (2011) and The Salesman (2016). It's a feat shared by only a few directors worldwide.

His newest film, A Hero (which is also Iran's official submission to this year's Academy Awards), has been on a lot of 2021 year-end lists and has received a ton of critical reception to date. Last year, it won the Cannes Film Festival's Grand Prix (the second-most prestigious prize of the festival after the Palme d'Or).

Knowing all of this, and very much wanting to begin my journey into seeing the Oscar-winning director's work, I watched a digital screener of the film at home in advance of the film going up on Prime Video this Friday.

First off, A Hero is a film without an obvious directorial style to it. It's not visually flashy and doesn't use grandiose camerawork in its storytelling. I don't even think there was any score, either. So, it's not exactly a film that rings as "cinematic," in those senses.

However, forgoing style makes its substance resonate so deeply. The people in this story, who are brought to life by a fantastic ensemble cast of actors, make the story feel even more human and real. And for a film that is intent on exploring the human condition, removing these layers of cinema to let the performances and story shine is exactly the right choice.

At 2 hours and 7 minutes, A Hero is about Rahim (Amir Jadidi), a man imprisoned for not being able to pay back a loan, and on temporary leave for two short days. With only a part of the money he needs to pay back his debt, he asks his creditor to withdraw his complaint against the payment of part of the sum. When the creditor denies, Rahim enacts is to show that Rahim, in fact, has purer motives underneath.

While he may not be telling the full truth in his story, the larger truth is that Rahim embellishes his story as a means to an end, looking to use his new goodwill to land a job to then pay back the creditor the rest of his money. Farhad's nuanced writing and shrewd observation of such a complex and conflicted character, as well as the larger human condition, forces the audience to consider the entire spectrum of ethics, as well as our own.

So, if you're like me, and have been largely unfamiliar with Asghar Farhadi's films to date, start with A Hero. You'll not only find a wealth of rich, thrilling drama that looks at the human condition but even consider the ethics by which you live your own life too.

2 hours 7 minutes. 'A Hero' is rated PG-13 for some thematic elements and language. •

News for the City of Good Neighbors from an Old Guy named Norb Huber

TRIPLE VACCINATED

I received my third shot today, a booster shot. Does that make me feel more protected? Maybe. For the past two years, we have been receiving mixed messages. Do this, do that. All of us want to feel safe, we want our loved ones to be safe.

Most of us just do our best to follow the rules, the guidelines, the directives and the mandates. We are willing to do whatever it takes to make our world safer. I'm sure glad that God does not send us mixed messages.

When you are the Creator of the world, you kind of know what is going on. In God we find wisdom, strength and direction. We read in Proverbs 3:5-6, "Trust in the Lord with all your heart, and do not lean on your own understanding. In all your ways acknowledge him and he will make straight your paths." Sometimes I feel lost. Sometimes I try to figure it all out on my own. Sometimes the world is so confusing, I just want to throw up my hands and forget it. When I look to my faith, I find my way. We don't know what is right around the corner, but God does. The goalposts don't move with God. We can live with confidence knowing that the truths and promises we find in God's Word are rock solid, immovable, and will be the same tomorrow, next year, and forever. When your paths are straight and you are walking in God's grace and love, you can relax and enjoy a cold one. The future is in His hands. We can have fun, we can enjoy life because we have been vaccinated by the Almighty One. Triple vaccinated? No, forever vaccinated. Allow God's meds to infiltrate your body!

PRO LIFE

Abortions were legalized 49 years ago on January 22, 1973. Roe vs Wade has been challenged throughout the years, but has remained in place to allow women the choice of ending a pregnancy. The US Supreme Court is going to rule later this year on whether a law in a state can limit abortions, especially late term abortions. It is now estimated and fact checked that over 60 million babies have been aborted since 1973. It is hard for me to write this let alone comprehend what that means. It is so sad to think of all the babies who never had a chance in life. Young girls who are 13 or 14 or 18 years of age have to be told that there are alternatives to ending their child's life. Pro life pregnancy clinics counsel them and show the mother their baby's embryo during an ultrasound. Most of the time these young ladies carry the baby to full term and birth. 40 Days for Life is a program of prayer that simply tries to communicate that Christian people are praying for the young mothers regardless of their decision to keep their child or not. If we love life, we must be the voice for the little ones who have no voice. Pray.

Start the liquids and tomatoes in a large Le Creuset with too much oregano, basil, bay leaves, salt, sugar (a dash to mitigate acids), and black pepper. This gives the sauce time to start evaporating and thickening.

Chop, sauté (in olive oil), and add everything else, one ingredient at a time. Cook until the thickened sauce tastes right, at most actual pieces of tomato in the sauce. 2-3 large cans, along with 1 small can of tomato paste.

Equal parts red wine and beef stock (1 can), plus 4 anchovies.

1 onion, 1 bell pepper, 1 box mushrooms, 1 head of garlic.

1-2 lbs. top round or chuck steak, hand chopped.

stove and cook the next AM for another hour. A spoon should stand up in it.

On Oils:

Never use any oil except olive, preferably Italian, and too expensive. If you can't taste the difference, you're not using enough of it.

On Pastas:

Don't waste a good sauce on cheap or fast pristine white blouse, they're disguising cheap ingredients.

You can't add too much grated cheese. Seriously. There has to be a law somewhere.

Spaghetti is twirled on the fork in the base of your plate. In Italy, if the server offers you a spoon, it's because they expect Americans to ask for one. If you're older than ten years an hour. Add more herbs if needed. Top with Parmigiana Reggiano (no substitute). Freeze in apportioned baggies for future feasts.

The Neapolitan Sauce:

When you order any pasta al Sugo south of Rome, you'll be eating whatever the owner feels like serving you. But usually, it will taste something like this one. Americans will generally recognize this sauce as something like the version they've ordered in a better Italian or Sicilian restaurant. Sicilian-Americans might call it "gravy".

True San Marzano tomatoes are grown only on the ashy slopes of Mount Vesuvius and are absolutely unique and non-negotiable. Beware of "SM type" and other fakes. We buy the whole ones and hand-squish them—yes, that will freak out some people, but it ensures 6 hot/sweet Italian sausages, sauteed or grilled (but not pricked), and sliced on the thin side. Parmigiana Reggiano (no substitute).

As with our Tuscan sauce, start the liquids and tomatoes in a large Le Creuset with too much basil, bay leaves, salt, sugar (a dash to mitigate acids), and black pepper. This gives the sauce time to start evaporating and thickening. Meantime, chop, sauté, and add everything else, one ingredient at a time. Add more herbs as needed, but hold the oregano, or else the true Sicilians will come looking for you.

Le Creuset loves to burn tomato paste, so your options are medium heat, constantly watching for 2 hours, or low heat forever. We sometimes make the sauce at night, cooking on low heat for 3 hours, then leave it on the pasta. The quicker it cooks (anything less than 10 minutes), the lower the quality (if any) of durum wheat semolina. Check the package. In the USA, we only buy the Italian product Rustichella 'd Abruzzo (on Amazon as a last resort). Here too, if you can't taste the difference, you might want to cut back on the sauce.

On Preparation:

It might sound obvious, but the main ingredient in any pasta dish is the pasta. The sauce is meant to flavor, not drown it. That's the reason we never, ever skimp on pasta (but don't necessarily mind repeating ourselves). We rarely use more than a cup or two of sauce and pre-mix it with the pasta on the stove, then give it a minute for absorption. If the restaurant's sauce splatters all over your and chop your spaghetti, we might have to disown you. Your Italian friends certainly will.

And BTW...

You might have noticed that we play rather fast and loose with quantities of ingredients. This isn't out of laziness. Any Italian dish has to be cooked to your (not our) taste and adjusted on the fly to suit your whim. Sometimes it all works beautifully, sometimes not so much. And that's what makes Italian cooking such a fascinating ride.

PETSPETS Pets PETSPETS

Featured Pets of the Week

Provided by Hannah Collett, spcaLA

China is a 4-year-old domestic short hair mama who gave birth to a litter of five while at spcaLA. Her kittens have all found homes, and she's ready for a forever family, too. She's a pretty little Tabby who loves to relax on a cushy bed or soak up the sun in a windowsill. <https://spcala.com/adoptable/pet/?ss=LACA-A-1996>

Meet Dobby, a 1-year-old female Pit Bull mix looking for a new home. While here, he'll be working on his basic obedience so he can be the best dog he can be! <https://spcala.com/adoptable/pet/?ss=LACA-A-2064>

Nico is a gentle giant searching for a mellow home. He is an eight year old domestic short hair who enjoys his people's company and may follow you from room to room, or sit next to you. He likes attention and has lived in a home with other small dogs and children. He has a low activity level and would be best as the only kitty. <https://spcala.com/adoptable/pet/?ss=LACA-A-2443>

Some call Hashbrown a big ol' baby. He's very gentle 5 year old Pitt Bull mix who likes a good petting session. He's working on his skills like sit, down, crawl, find it, and recall. He walks well on a leash but can pull hard on the leash at times. Hashbrown will be the best pet as the only baby. <https://spcala.com/adoptable/pet/?ss=LACA-A-1229> • spcaLA is saddened by the passing of Betty White, American actor and activist. Betty was a friend to animals and worked closely with spcaLA to promote the humane treatment of all living beings since the 1940s. For nearly 80 years, Betty worked to further the mission of spcaLA – participating in spcaLA telethons raising money to extend programs and services, voicing public service announcements (PSAs) to educate the community, and fundraising, which has provided adoption and enrichment services for thousands of homeless animals since it opened in 2001.

This year, on what would have been Betty's 100th Birthday – January 17th – please consider making a special donation in her honor. Your support will help her legacy live on in spcaLA's work to fulfill our mission of preventing cruelty to animals through Intervention, Law Enforcement, Education and Advocacy. spcala.com/donate •
