Cherchez la Truffe!

Article and photos by Ben & Glinda Shipley

This story starts out on a bitterly cold November evening in the ancient Marais quarter of Paris, at our favorite northern Italian restaurant on the planet, Enoteca. Actually, it probably starts out a few hours earlier, around the corner at our favorite absinthe bistro on the planet, Chez Janou. The latter is renowned for its tiny horseshoe bar and the expert Provençal bartenders who can identify and recommend every one of their 53 styles of absinthe—so we might not be entirely sure about the bitter cold that evening, but we vividly recall the rest of it.

We've never come close to a bad meal at Enoteca—a highly unusual circumstance in the mom-and-pop style of restaurants we typically patronize in Paris, where nearly everyone suffers an occasional off-night, and you just have to roll with the punches. But that evening, the chef decided to celebrate truffle season with fresh truffles in every dish on the menu—from the carpaccio to the tagliatelle, to the veal chop, and even the fresh ice cream.

At that point in our lifelong culinary journey, we knew truffles mainly by reputation. What we didn't know was that 95% of the truffle dishes we'd tasted were a certified rip-off. If you don't spot the thin black or white slices on your plate—if the dish is flavored with "truffle oil"—then you're nearly always consuming cheap olive oil flavored with the synthetic chemical 2,4-dithiapentane. If that isn't appetizing enough, consider that 2,4-dithiapentane is also known as the dimethyl dithioacetal of formaldehyde. And if you still haven't lost your appetite, 2,4-dithiapentane is the odor that overwhelms your nostrils in halitosis, smelly feet, and some forms of flatulence.

Yum!

So that evening, our entirely authentic (and wildly expensive) dinner at Enoteca, even with hours of Chez Janou's absinthe in our bloodstreams, came as a revelation—one of those meals in your gastronomic life that divides the BE from the AE (Before and After Enoteca). As of that night, we still had a few weeks of vacation left and nothing planned, so our mission became clear—to thoroughly research the subject of truffles and to chase the weird and elusive tubers all the way to their origins.

There's a scene in the movie Goodfellas, where the Paul Sorvino godfather takes forever to slice a garlic clove with a razor blade into tiny, translucent sheets (since he's in prison, he naturally has the time). No one would blame you for slicing your truffles that way (in or out of prison), because the genuine article comes in at more than $300 per pound. So one way to guess that you're buying the real thing comes when your French grocer uses three keys and a secret password to unlock the caviar-pâté-truffle cabinet.

Why so expensive? Because human beings have never quite found a way to standardize the harvesting of the tuber, a distant relative of the common mushroom. Truffles grow in random clumps a few centimeters underground, in the roots of oak and hazelnut trees, both wild and cultivated. Theoretically, they can be found anywhere on earth, but the three dominant regions are Italian Piedmont for white truffles, and Périgord (just outside Bordeaux) and upper Provence for the black, French version. In the 19th century, these regions exported truffles of both colors, but then World War I killed too many farmers, World War II destroyed too many forests, and suddenly, truffle-harvesting became a rare and disappearing art.

Hangry by Drew Brockington

By Kristina Kora-Beckman, Senior Librarian, El Segundo Public Library

We've all experienced a time in our lives when we're hungry, and angry, and they feed on each other until we're HANGRY! This delightful story captures the buildup and big emotions that a small green dinosaur feels when he is hungry but foiled time and again in his search for a hot dog to curb his appetite. Chaos ensues when the dino grows and grows as he gets hungrier and angrier, and hungrier, and angrier until he's an enormous hangry rampaging monster destroying buildings and eating everything in sight.

Colorful spreads and word bubble dialog

lend a comic book feel to the title while interspersed humor balanced with the voice of reason, aka a hot dog vendor that has "enough for everyone" leads to a satisfying resolution for all. Kids and adults alike can relate to both feeling hangry, and dealing with hangry people. Brockington's story can be a great conversation starter about what to do with those feelings and how we can address them before, and even after, they get out of control.

To check out Hangry or other humorous social emotional books for kids of all ages, please visit youth section, located on the lower level of our library. ## Film Review

In Twist-Filled Drama 'Sundown,' Tim Roth Reveals His Shadow Self

By Ryan Rojas

Where to watch: 'Sundown' is now playing in select theaters and available to rent on Digital Platforms.

When it first begins, Sundown slows you down to its wonderfully relaxing, worry-free vacation time. The sight of Tim Roth endlessly lounging in a luxurious resort overlooking a beautiful Mexican coastline had me enjoying every gorgeously serene and sun-drenched moment (and made me remember his other vacation film, 2021's Bergman Island). Then, Sundown's darker story begins to unfold, and the shadows begin to loom large. Soon enough, I also remembered the other side of the fantasy that vacations offer: escaping from your current circumstances, and yourself.

Unless anybody spoils the story for you (don't worry, I'll spare you any overly-revelatory deeper, more twisted, and complex reasons. Like avoiding sinister truths that we can only attempt to outrun for so long.

Franco teases out the rest of Neil's larger story so well, especially in regards to how he shoots the film. Yves Cape's (2012's Holy Motors) beautiful cinematography consists of widely framed shots, immersing and hiding Neil in his surroundings. The enduring images in Sundown are of Neil slumped over in various lounge chairs, staring vacantly into large bodies of water (the ocean, a hotel pool, it makes no difference). Also, from behind, in three-quarter, and side-profile shots (there is always a side of him we're not seeing). Franco uses the idea of the sun and the shadow to further symbolize Neil's internally conflicted state. Neil stays mostly in the shadows of his hotel room or on the beach, except for a details here), you'll have absolutely no idea what to expect in this twist-filled, thrilling drama. Heading into Sundown as blind as possible really will make for the best viewing experience. Although even I knew a tad more than I would've liked to have known before going in, I was still entirely unprepared for what Sundown had in store.

Written and directed by Michel Franco (2020's New Order), Sundown is a slow-burn film that follows Neil (Tim Roth) on vacation in Mexico with his family, Alice (Charlotte Gainsbourg), Alexa (Albertine Kottling McMillan), and Colin (Samuel Bottomley). When an unexpected emergency summons them all back home to London, the family must cut their trip short and hurry to the airport. It's a tense moment, made even more heart-dropping when Neil realizes that he's forgotten his passport back at the hotel. Unable to join them on the flight and now separated from his family, he hops into a taxi. When the driver asks where he's headed—and it's here where the film gets interesting—Neil simply requests to be taken to a hotel—any hotel.

Puzzled, we're left trying to make sense of what's going on in Neil's head by studying his calm demeanor and blank, expressionless stares (the film definitely hints that something's on his mind, with shots of him staring vacantly into the ocean and pools). Neil proceeds to aimlessly walkabout in his flip-flops, having beers on the beach, and even meeting a local, Berenice (Jazua Larios). While Alice continues to try to contact him, Neil continues to deceive and avoid her calls. We're now fully only along for this mysterious ride, and the Sundown only dials up the heat from there.

Writer-director Michel Franco patiently divulges every piece of new information, which ratchets up the suspense in every scene. Neil's avoidance really gets under your skin—a cinematic sunburn—when you consider how easy it would be for any one of us to do exactly that. We've all had fantasies where we imagine leaving our old lives behind, impulsively staying on that never-ending vacation. Sometimes it's in the pursuit of enjoying the pleasures that the world has to offer, other times it's for sprinkling of moments where he's head-on in the scorching sunlight.

Tim Roth is truly exceptional here. As Neil, Roth gives a mostly quiet, internal, and understated performance. The longer Neil remains unwaveringly relaxed under these distressing times, the tension grows to wildly unexpected new heights. We eventually learn about Neil's history and his family's global significance as an affluent business, which reveals Neil's strange behavior. With Sundown, Roth continues to re-emerge onto the film scene as an unsettling, pathological figure (look for him as an unnerving villain in Resurrection, which premiered at Sundance this year). Just by sipping a beer, or even while doing nothing, Roth radiates an unnerving quality who seems to be possessed by the question: what is peace? Is it the sustained feeling of happiness, or can peace just be what's left when you've outrun the darkness?

If you're intrigued, and in search of a smartly-written film that starts as a slow-burn drama before ending up as a head-spinning, jaw-dropping hallucinatory fever dream of a film, then look no further than Sundown. Led by an incredible performance by Tim Roth, Sundown is one of the most unexpected, gripping, and utterly arresting dramas I've had the joy of seeing recently.

1h 22m. 'Sundown' is rated R for sexual content, violence, language, and some graphic nudity. •

Diabetes Is The Leading Cause For Kidney Disease

(BPT) - Today, nearly 122 million people in the United States are living with diabetes or prediabetes. This condition is the leading cause of kidney disease - where the kidneys lose function over time until they fail. In fact, one in three adults with diabetes has developed kidney disease.

Raising awareness about the link between these two chronic conditions is the first step to improving the health of people at risk of kidney failure. That's why health care provider DaVita Kidney Care has collaborated with the American Diabetes Association® (ADA) to help increase early detection and risk reduction for kidney disease.

"Our partnership with DaVita has created a platform for the American Diabetes Association to get information to those who need it most," said Dr. Bob Gabbay, chief scientific medical officer for the ADA. "We're working together to build awareness about the connection between diabetes and kidney disease - and to help people with these conditions manage their health."

Fifty percent of people with very low kidney function don't know they have kidney disease. By the time many people discover the state of their health, their kidneys have failed and they need a transplant or dialysis treatment to live.

"We're committed to addressing kidney failure holistically, which includes getting ahead of kidney disease to help patients receive preventative care," said Dr. Jeff Giullian, chief medical officer for DaVita. "We're also ensuring there are no-cost tools available to help people address and manage these conditions before they progress."

Early detection of diabetes is proven to prevent life-altering complications like kidney failure. Testing is a simple but essential tool to detect risk for diabetes and monitor the disease's progress. For those living with diabetes, it's critical to get your kidneys checked regularly by a doctor through simple blood and urine tests.

Because people living with diabetes are at greater risk of developing kidney disease, the ADA is helping to get the word out about DaVita's Kidney Smart® classes. These no-cost classes are open to anyone and led by kidney experts. They provide communities with an overview of kidney disease risks, detection information, and diet and nutrition resources.

Diet is a connecting point between diabetes and kidney disease, as a key driver of type 2 diabetes and a critical part of maintaining

It might come as a surprise, considering how they usually live, but female pigs have one of the most acute senses of smell in the animal kingdom. Add in the fact that the scent of raw truffles is indistinguishable from the sex pheromone of boar saliva, and for centuries, these females have proved remarkably enthusiastic at sniffing out the underground fungi. The only issue is that these same very smart pigs excel at wolfing down the buried treasure before the farmer can pry it away from them. So much so that, in 1985, Italy banned pigs altogether in favor of dogs—who don't particularly care for the taste, but can be trained from puppyhood to follow its scent.

On that allegedly cold November evening at Enoteca, we'd already thought about following in Thomas Jefferson's steps when he took a rickety three-day carriage ride to Tain-l'Hermitage, south of Lyon, to augment his wine collection. Tain and Châteauneuf-du-Pape bookend a hilly wine region in southeast France that boasts some of the country's best "undiscovered" wines—up-and-coming AOCs like Gigondas and Vacqueyras. So we decided to stock up on obscure wines, chase down the black truffles of the Vaucluse, and then head to Marseille for Bouillabaisse.

As we mentioned, sometimes in traveling, you just have to roll with the punches. And it turned out that Enoteca had been celebrating the start of the Italian truffle season—the French season, where we were headed, wouldn't open for another couple of weeks. The bad news: We'd miss the boisterous open-air markets where the farmers convene to sell their harvests. We'd also miss the latest and greatest truffle specials in the local restaurants. The good news: No one would mind us wandering around the plantations themselves, sniffing and photographing the pregnant, photogenic oaks.

And so we spent a week wine-shopping and puttering around Richerenches, Carpentras, and Grignon, the three scenic villages at the heart of the French truffle industry. With the lavender and fruit tree harvests just in, the air was pungent with a constantly evolving aroma. The truffle forests were unfenced, so the only limit on our meanderings was the size of our tires and the ruts on the dirt roads. Farmers—who would probably shoo us out of the way in another month—glanced up from the repairs they were working on, but otherwise ignored the invasion.

In that sleepy calm before the harvesting storm, the biggest challenge was to find an open restaurant for an edible lunch. So we were walking around Grignon, getting used to the idea of kebabs at the local Turkish grill, when we passed a rusty cast iron gate into a

Paris—Armed against an icy chill by the absinthes at Chez Janou, disaster of wildly overgrown weeds. Through the mess, we thought we spotted a glass greenhouse with uniformed young women walking back and forth. A push of the gate, and we crawled through to find the back door to a thoroughly elegant atrium restaurant with exactly one two-top available.

At the next table, a bride-to-be and her mother and aunts (we guessed) were being served an endless variety of Nouvelle Cuisine tidbits. When we discreetly enquired of the maître d', he explained that we were looking at an eight-course tasting menu that the chef had developed for brides who were planning their receptions. Naturally, that was exactly what we were looking for—more or less anyway—so we spent the next three hours in the longest, most elaborate, most delicious, and yes, most expensive, lunch we'd ever eaten.

But here, in the heart of truffle country, out of season and in the typically purist French manner, not one iota of truffle appeared on our plates. So we just had to roll with that punch straight out of the restaurant and into a very long and happy afternoon nap.

Expert Tips To Protect Yourself From Credit Scams

(BPT) - While credit scams have been around forever, they've recently exploded in number. According to Mint, from 2019 to 2020, the number of identity theft reports went up by 113% and the number of reports of identity theft by credit cards increased by 44.6%. The amount of fraud by new credit card accounts saw a 48% increase from 2019.

As more information is digital today, on top of the increase in health and financial stressors, scams designed to access your credit accounts or personal information are on the rise.

Here are tips to help protect your credit and personal information.

Use long, strong passwords unique to each account or website - or use a password manager to help create better passwords and keep track of them. Change the password on your home's router. If you're using the same password for several accounts, or haven't changed passwords in a while, now's the time to clean up your digital act.

Having digital and physical backups for your data protects you from not only losing important information, but also from ransomware attacks - when a hacker freezes or destroys your data unless you pay them in bitcoin. While this is more likely to happen to businesses, it can give you peace of mind to have your data backed up.

Consider both a Cloud backup as well as on a physical hard drive - and/or printing out vital information or documents.

Keeping an eye on your credit reports alerts you to attempts to steal your identity, such as someone opening an account in your name. You can check any of the major credit reporting companies for free once a year. However, because identity theft is becoming more frequent, you should check your credit score more often. One tactic is to rotate which company you request a report from, requesting one every few months.

You can also check your credit with VantageScore, which uses credit scoring models that provide lenders and consumers with highly predictive credit scores that are easier to understand and actually score more people. Access yours for free through the providers at VantageScore.com.

Check your credit reports for:

- Credit accounts/debt that isn't yours.
  - Inquiries indicating a company accessed your report without your permission.
  - An address where you've never lived.
- This could be a sign someone's tried to use your identity to open an account.

If you see items like these on your report, contact the credit agency right away. A change

This can help prevent fraudulent credit applications from being opened. Then you can choose when to "unfreeze" the credit reports and put them back into circulation.

Purrrfect Companions

Ava

If you want a cat with a certain kind of personality, you're better off adopting an adult. That kitten who is cute and snuggly now may mature into a totally different kind of cat! Cats who are teens or adults have lived with our foster volunteers, so we can match you up with the kind of cat you are looking for. When you adopt, you save a life... and in turn enrich your own.

Ethan came to us with four siblings (Larry, Mo, Curly, and Lucy). He's a lovely kitten, so sweet and playful. However, he is very shy. We are working to help him overcome his shyness and he is getting better day by day. When you adopt Ethan, please have patience as he learns to trust. It would be wonderful for Ethan to have a cat-friendly dog or another cat/kitten in his new home for him to play with. However, he is old enough to be adopted alone as long as you are able to give Ethan the attention needed to allow him to blossom.

Larry, Ethan's outgoing brother, is an "in your face, give me attention now, play with me, love me now," kind of kitten. He would do best if he had another kitten, cat, or cat-friendly dog to play with! Larry is just a plain brown tabby, but his outgoing personality and affection gives him a movie star quality you won't want to pass by.

Quigley is a bit of a goofball professor. This sweet intelligent boy is quick to learn and loves meeting new people and making friends. He is talkative and will engage in a "conversation" for several minutes while he purrs and gives loving headbutts. Quigley's temperament is mellow, calm, and very social. He will do best in a home where there is at least one person around for snuggles and attention. Because he was accustomed to living outdoors, and sometimes misses it, it would also be ideal for his home to have a secure patio, or other type of enclosed, screened balcony, for him to get some fresh air and to be outside for a little while.

These silly willy baby loves are the ultimate cuddle monsters! As soon as you begin to hold Gracie or Opie they begin to purr. Gracie has the loudest purr of the two of them and Opie wins for speed during zoomies. If they're not cuddling one another, they are running around at the speed of light and drifting around corners. Gracie will ask for cuddles by jumping on your chest, climbing up and nestling her little head on your shoulder. These girls are looking for a family that will not stifle their super fun jumping abilities because they really do enjoy it so much! Gracie and Opie are also good with bunnies and other cats.

Ava is a lovely seven-month-old kitten who was found dumped at a park along with her two sisters, Olivia and Esperanza. Thankfully, they were found and picked up by a cat rescuer and were placed in a foster home. Ava is a kind and energetic kitten. She enjoys being given attention and playing with any type of toy she can grab with her paws and that bounces. Ava gets along with small children and would probably enjoy being at a home with a toddler. Ava needs to be adopted with one of her sisters, with another kitty or into a home who has another kitty. Ava will be your companion for life. She will cuddle with you and stay by you no matter what. Would you be willing to take this adorable kitten into your loving home?

These cats and kittens are available for adoption through Kitten Rescue, one of the largest cat rescue groups in Southern California. All our kitties are spayed/neutered, microchipped, tested for FeLV and FIV, dewormed and current on their vaccinations. For additional information and to see these or our other kittens and cats, please check our website www.kittenrescue.org.

Our Adoption Center is temporarily closed. In the meantime, we are still conducting contactless adoptions using all the online tools at our disposal. To virtually browse our adoptable cats, please visit our Adoption Gallery where you can find photos and profiles of all the cats and kittens we have up for adoption from our network of foster homes and from the Sanctuary. At the end of each cat's profile is a link to the email address of the foster parent or adoption counselor, and you may reach out directly with questions or to arrange a virtual meeting.

The donations and support we receive from individuals like you, who share our love and commitment to helping cats and kittens in Los Angeles, are the sole reason we are able to do what we do. We are grateful for your financial help. By making even a small donation today, you can touch the lives of the many deserving, wonderful animals in our care. There are many ways you can donate and help, and every dollar means so much. Kitten Rescue is a 501(c)(3) nonprofit. Your tax-deductible donations for the rescue and care of our cats and kittens can be made through our website or by sending a check payable to Kitten Rescue, 3519 Casitas Ave., Los Angeles, CA 90039.

Saving one animal won't change the world, but the world will surely change for that animal. •
