Inglewood Unified School District would like to congratulate Payne STEAM Academy Transitional Kindergarten (TK) teacher, Mrs. Cicely Bingener, who was surprised during #TeacherAppreciationWeek by the SoCal Helpful Honda Dealers Team with $5,000 worth of classroom supplies and materials for her students. Mrs. Bingener was nominated by a former classmate and high school friend for her hard work, dedication and commitment to her students. Like many of our amazing teachers, Mrs. Bingener rose to the challenge and continued to support her students in every way possible during the COVID-19 pandemic. Congratulations Mrs. Bingener, and thank you for all of your efforts to ensure students receive high quality instruction and are consistently nurtured and cared for. ## South Bay Local Author Dick Upton; Master Chronicler of General Custer and Indian Wars

By Duane Plank

We will start with a Thursday morning trivia quiz... What do George Custer, the United States general who became famous (infamous?) after he and many of his charges were annihilated by the coalescing of three Indian tribes on a deadly battlefield back in late June of 1876 along the Little Bighorn River in the Montana territory, and Hall of Famer "Prince Hal" Newhouser, a southpaw pitcher for both the Detroit Tigers and Cleveland Indians, have in common? A General and a Prince?

Tick-tock... Does anyone know the answer? And the answer is: both men are subjects of serious interest to El Segundo, author, publisher, and resident Richard "Dick" Upton.

Upton has a keen interest in history, especially the historic timeframe surrounding the life and death of Custer. One of his books, of which more than 50 have been published, featured the Battle of the Little Bighorn, known to the Lakota and other Plains Indians, as the Battle of the Greasy Grass, and commonly referred to as Custer's Last Stand. It was an armed engagement between combined forces of the Lakota, Northern Cheyenne, and Arapaho tribes and the 7th Cavalry Regiment of the United States Army. The battle, which resulted in the defeat of U.S. forces, was the most significant action of the Great Sioux War of 1876. On June 25-26, 1876, it took place along the Little Big Horn River in the Crow Indian Reservation in southeastern Montana Territory.

The fight was an overwhelming victory for Indians, who were led into battle by several major Native American titans, including Crazy Horse. The visions of Sitting Bull had inspired it. The U.S. 7th Cavalry, a force of 700 men, suffered the major defeat while commanded by Custer. Five of the Cavalry's twelve companies were annihilated, and Custer was killed, as were four of his male relatives; the total U.S. casualty count included 268 dead and 55 severely wounded (six died later from their wounds).

The battle and events in the tumultuous ensuing decades in Montana, which became a state in 1889, piqued the interest of Upton, and he began a career documenting that locales events and that period in Western American history.

El Segundo resident Todd Felker considers Upton a long-time friend. During our phone conversation, Felker shared that he used to, back in the '90s, do some computer work for Upton. "Upton has lived in town forever," Felker shared and is "Probably one of the countries foremost experts on General Custer. He has written a lot of books, published a lot on topics related to that facet of the Civil War." Felker said that Upton did not limit his interests to researching post-Civil War history. "He has been in some bands, played baseball until up into his 70's, late sixties at least, and has a lot of interesting baseball stories," Felker said.

As he entered his golden years, Felker said, Upton continued working, writing, editing, and publishing his books and processing orders on websites such as Upton and Sons.

On the sporting side, Upton was always a baseball pitcher, Felker added. Once he entered military service, Upton played on a 'club' baseball team in the Army, hoping to move up to the varsity army team, but his superior officer nixed that idea. Undeterred, Felker said,

Dick Upton and Wife Frankie

Upton seized an opportunity to pitch against the regular Army team and proceeded to shut them down, which prompted a keen baseball observer, and Army General, to inquire "who is that kid on the mound?" who was stifling the bats of the top-seeded team in the long-ago held Army tournament.

Upton said that "Baseball and the Civil War era were two things that I seemed to excel in. I wasn't very verbal," he admitted. He was born and raised in Flint, Michigan, in 1933, "a great time," he said while noting that "Flint (today) is a grim place, but in those days, was a wonderful place. Work was good, and people were buying second homes. It was wonderful."

Upton said that both of his parents were from Canada and that his mother was the child of a "well-off" family and had inherited "some money." Because of health issues, the family

Oprah and Prince Harry Talk Mental Health Struggles in The Me You Can't See

Morgan Rojas for Cinemacy

The topic of mental health has taken on more importance over the last year when isolation and loneliness was universally felt at an all-time high. Co-produced by Oprah and Prince mind so much. The first episode is broken up into five chapters that highlight different people dealing with their own mental health struggles, none of which are alike. It's a safe narrative structure, but the driving force here

The Me You Can't See, courtesy of Apple TV+.

Harry, The Me You Can't See is a documentary series comprised of hour-long episodes that go into intimate detail about struggles with mental health and just how universal these feelings of helplessness and sadness are. Throughout their candid sit down conversation, Prince Harry and Oprah explain how 2020 put a mirror in front of the grief that was already present in so many people, and their goal for the series is to shine a light on the «invisible injury» that is mental health. This series is important, personal, and now streaming on Apple TV+.

The Me You Can't See is by far one of the most heartfelt and vulnerable series that is currently streaming on platforms today. Seeing how some of the most powerful people in entertainment put on brave faces and pretend like everything's ok, when in reality they're struggling to just make it through the day, is heartbreaking. The series also shares the personal journeys of other public figures, including Lady Gaga and Glenn Close, with more to be included throughout the various episodes.

Technically speaking, The Me You Can't See is a very traditional docu-series and visually, it can almost be confused for a 20/20 special. It relies heavily on the «talking heads» style of interview but when the talking heads are Prince Harry and Oprah Winfrey, we don't isn't the cinematic achievements, rather they stories they propel.

Everyone who connects to this series in one way or another should feel comforted by the fact that we are all kindred spirits with struggles and insecurities of our own. Acting as a starting point towards collective healing and understanding, The Me You Can't See proves that everyone is carrying some sort of emotional baggage that goes undetected. We shouldn't go through life alone and with The Me You Can't See, now we don't have to. •

First Steps In Retirement Planning - For All Americans

(BPT) - Even if you're young, newly employed or haven't yet started to save for retirement, many financial professionals agree planning is key to achieving a sense of security for your future. But a new survey shows that if you're a first- or second-generation American, a woman, African American or Hispanic employee, you may feel disconnected from the financial services industry and its benefits. One reason is that you may be less likely to have opportunities to save for retirement through your workplace - or you may feel the financial services industry is not geared toward serving the needs of you or your community.

The good news? The financial services industry and many employers are working to offer greater accessibility for all employees trying to save for retirement - even with a moderate income - and are trying to make it easier for all their employees to be proactive about financial planning, no matter when or where they begin.

The new survey conducted by Harris Poll for Empower Retirement shows that women and people of color feel underrepresented when it comes to retirement saving. In fact, 70% of all respondents said they agreed with the statement: «Retirement planning is a luxury that is not afforded to all types of Americans.» But the truth is that retirement planning is possible, no matter where or when you start. And it can make a huge difference for your financial situation down the road.

Another issue is that over half (52%) felt they would not be taken seriously as a client by a financial services company. People who feel that financial professionals will not take them seriously instead turn to family (44%) or friends (25%) for advice. While the people you know may have your best interests at heart, they may lack the financial know-how to advise you on how to save effectively for a secure retirement. Consulting a licensed financial professional can be one way to be sure that the advice you receive is based on knowledge and expertise about the best ways to save for retirement. Fortunately, access to financial professionals with specialized certifications is much more accessible than you may think.

Here are tips and resources to help you get started on your retirement planning journey.

- Start now. No matter where you are in your career, starting with small savings now can make a huge difference down the road - and those savings can accumulate and grow over time.

- Contact your HR department. Especially if you're unsure what your employer offers for retirement planning, asking questions is a great place to start. Don't be afraid to ask for explanations of unclear terms or services.

- Match those funds. Some employers will match your 401(k) contributions up to a certain percentage point, so you'll get the full benefit of those funds by making sure you contribute at least that amount.

- Consult a financial planner. Ask if your employee benefits include the services of a financial planner. Many employers offer consultations with a financial professional free of charge, to help with your planning efforts.

- Personalize your savings options. Ask about opting into a managed account for your 401(k). This will provide you with a personalized strategy for your funds based on factors including your age, amount saved, timeline and savings goals - even if you're starting with a small amount.

- Explore government resources. To understand how and when you can most benefit from applying for Social Security, visit the retirement planning sections on the Social Security website, SSA.gov.

Retirement planning and saving can now benefit everyone, and can help improve your future financial outlook, no matter where you're starting from today. •

Over 40? Things To Know About Your Vision

(BPT) - Dinner menus, smartphones and computer screens are all things you encounter daily. But have you noticed that since turning 40, you're having issues seeing them clearly? If you've found yourself holding the menu at arm's distance, increasing your phone's font size to read text messages, or taking more frequent breaks from the computer screen during the work day, you might be among millions of Americans with presbyopia.

Now, you may say presby-what? It's a complicated name for a common eye condition that means you have trouble focusing on things up-close. This condition is a natural part of aging and is much more common than you think - if you look around, you'll likely notice it's also happening to lots of your friends and family members.

Like many people, you may not completely understand what's happening with your vision at this age, but rest assured there's help. Dr. Susan Resnick, a New York-based optometrist, shares some information that can help you bring your eyesight back into focus after 40.

"For many, your vision might be the first thing to change once you reach 40," said Resnick. "I often see patients who come into my practice in a panic because they notice they suddenly can't read their phone or a book. Even if a patient has never had a vision issue before or if your vision has worsened in a short amount of time, presbyopia is a normal part of aging. There are options that can correct your vision and help you see clearly near and far."

If You Have Presbyopia, You Are Not Alone

More than 111 million Americans struggle to read or see up close after the age of 40, which is when presbyopia typically strikes. The bad news is that you can't prevent presbyopia. The good news - you don't have to accept blurry up-close vision or reading glasses as a fact of life. Advancements in eye care can provide solutions that fit your lifestyle, including contact lenses, which can help you see seamlessly and clearly, up close and far away.

You Should Read Up On Readers

Like most people, you might think the only option to address presbyopia is purchasing cheap reading glasses from the drugstore. However, while readers can be great in a pinch, they can also be cumbersome as a long-term solution to presbyopia. They often get lost, can break and are inconvenient to constantly put on and take off as you switch from seeing up close and looking further away. What's more annoying than having to wear your readers on a chain around your neck, or getting them stuck in your hair as you flip them on top of your head?

Also, many people believe wearing readers can even make you feel older. In fact, an Alcon survey of people in their 40s and early 50s found that one-in-four adults think reading glasses can make someone look 10 years older. And, nearly 50 percent of those surveyed would avoid wearing readers if they knew it made them look older.5

Find Freedom with Contact Lenses

Whether taking selfies, doing your favorite exercise or whipping up a recipe in the kitchen, multifocal contact lenses can free you from putting on and taking off your reading glasses, and give you the flexibility to see clearly at any distance.

"I usually recommend multifocal contact lenses to my patients with presbyopia because they are designed to help you comfortably and seamlessly see near, far and everywhere in between. Most importantly, these contact lenses give you the freedom to lose your reading glasses," explains Resnick.

The takeaway here? When it comes to seeing clearly up close, don't be tethered to readers or let presbyopia make you give up on your fun and the activities you love. •

ENVIRONMENTAL REVIEW: Design Review Application No. 2021DR04 and the approval of the General Plan Amendment and Change of Zone constitutes a project that is subject to review under the California Environmental Quality Act (CEQA) (Public Resources Code Section 21000 et seq.), and the State CEQA Guidelines (California Code of Regulations Section 15000 et seq.). In accordance with CEQA, the Planning Commission has considered the Addendum to the 2017 IS/MND, and based on the entirety of the record, the Planning Commission, exercising its independent judgment and analysis, determines that the revised Project would not result in significant modifications or have any occurrences within the conditions described in CEQA Guidelines Section 15162. In addition, the impact comparison provided in the Addendum to the 2017 IS/MND demonstrates that no new potentially significant impacts would occur, and that no substantial increase in the severity of impacts would occur upon implementation of the revised Project. There is no substantial evidence in the record supporting a fair argument that approval of the Project will result in a significant environmental effect, and will not have an adverse effect, either individually or cumulatively, on wildlife or the habitat upon which wildlife depends.
PLEASE NOTE that pursuant to Government Code Section 65009: In an action or proceeding to attack, review, set aside, void, or annul a finding, determination or decision of the Planning Commission or City Council, the issues raised shall be limited to those raised at the public hearing in this notice or in written correspondence delivered to the Planning Commission or City Council at or prior to the public hearing.

Dick Upton

was counseled to relocate to California and landed in Culver City more than 70 years ago.

He was, at the time, favoring playing baseball and plying his musical chops on the tuba while also sharpening the verbal skills that he deemed necessary to develop in his new environment. He attended Venice High School, continued refining his tuba talents, met people by playing baseball, and became a standout pitcher. Upton related that he was not overpowering on the mound, but gave credit to a childhood Michigan friend, who saw that Upton had potential on the hill, and as soon as Upton grew a bit, he started to have success on the mound.

Upton flashed back some seventy years ago, remembering that he pitched against El Segundo High School at a long-ago raised field on Arena St., a prep baseball game contested more than seven decades ago; Upton said that he struck out the first four batters.

Following the baseball trajectory, Upton played service baseball while he was serving the United States in the Korean War. He also won pitching accolades in American Legion baseball.

He received a scholarship to Loyola Marymount University, but that did not work out too well. "I was successful there, but I wasn't mature enough and just could not keep my grades up. Lost my scholarship, so I went into the U.S. Army." He later sojourned to Alaska to play summer ball in the Alaska Baseball League, a league that still endures. It was around that time in his sporting life, Upton said, that his aspirations to climb the ladder of professional baseball were doused. "I found out that you had to be," Upton said, "more than just good."

As a tuba player, he was considered by those who knew music as "more than just good." Like baseball had, his tuba playing opened "a lot of doors" for him. He said that he played "symphonic, operatic stuff," but to pay the bills, Upton realized he "had to get a job." He landed employment with the Bank of America in Culver City, ascending to the post of lending officer. He got hitched to his wife Frankie, a schoolteacher, and decided to leave his B of A job and return to school, "even though I was a terrible student." As an older returning student, Upton said he got "serious," to not be derailed by extracurricular activities, including baseball.

Upton later landed a job in the Wiseburn Unified School District, teaching instrumental music and leading the student band. He was also playing the tuba professionally, working with what he termed "wonderful, wonderful, conductors and musicians." In the late '50s and the early '60s, a time frame Upton called "the golden age of the Wiseburn District," he said school districts were always looking for "winning football coaches, and successful band directors," who could help entice parents and their children to enroll in the district.

Upton said that the prior band director in the district was "a better musician than me," but that his musical leanings, Upton noted, mentioning Mozart, were not the type of tunes that were necessarily helpful in motivating a teenage musician of that era.

Upton said budget cuts threatened his music program, which was eventually axed. He went to the superintendent and tried to devise a solution and broached a unique option. Upton was slated to teach daily in the classroom, which he was not too keen about. He offered to pay someone else to teach the class ($100 bucks a day at the time). "So, I paid $18,000 dollars to "continue the privilege of teaching band and orchestra." That game-plan fizzled-out, however, only lasting for a year, but Upton said that it was "Quite an experience, glad that I did it."

So how did a Michigan lad, by way of Southern California, become immersed in post-Civil War history and the demise of General Custer? Upton got married to a woman from Billings, Montana, (Frankie) whose grandfather was stationed at Fort Custer all those years ago. Frankie's grandfather was involved in the Cavalry.

Said Upton: "I wanted to find out more about grandpa," but in the pre-Google days, that was not an easy task. He said that Fort Custer was built one year after the Custer battle, but that the Custer battlefield had been "completely wiped off of the map."

Book publisher Doug Westfall of The Paragon Agency has been working with Upton for 25-or-so years. They met about a quarter-century ago when both were attending book-related events in Los Angeles and formed a partnership that exists to this day.

"He has published more books on Indian Wars and Custer's Last Stand than any other publisher," Westfall said. "He is the champion of Western history, and we applaud that," while noting that Paragon is planning to publish another Upton book this summer. "You have to hand it to the guy for what he has done," Westfall said.

As for his support of the continuing sometimes somnambulant Detroit Tigers (although they did garner a recent winning streak), Upton offered that "They win just enough to break your heart." Alas, when this story was filed, the Tigers sported a not-so robust 17-26 record, good enough to be ensconced in fourth place in the American League Central Division.

Adding a little more local flavor to the story: When local baseball icon George Brett was signed by the Kansas City Royals more than 50 years ago, he was jettisoned by Royal management to play his first professional season in Billings, Montana. Obviously awfully familiar with the Montana environs, Upton traveled to the unofficially christened "Big Sky Country" to watch Brett play. The future hall-of-famer ascended from the dugout to speak with the Upton's. "I am not hitting now," Brett said, "but I am going to start hitting." It seems to have worked out OK for Mr. Brett, right?

The Uptons have called El Segundo home for more than 50 years, and Dick said that that is a timeframe that he has cherished. He has met "A group of really decent people," he said, calling the friends and business associates that he had made "keepers, people that I am proud to cross paths with, and I hope that never ends," noting how El Segundo locals' band together to help out their neighbors. "I hope that the city stays that way."

The people who have "crossed paths" with Upton probably feel the same way. •

Directions

- Step 1: Heat the picante sauce and cumin in a 10-inch skillet over medium heat to a boil. Crack the eggs and add them to the skillet one at a time. Reduce the heat to low. Cook the eggs to desired doneness. Remove the eggs from the skillet with a slotted spoon and keep them warm.
- Step 2: Stir the cream cheese in the skillet. Cook and stir until the cream cheese is melted.
- Step 3: Cook the bacon in another 10-inch skillet over medium-high heat until it's lightly browned on both sides.
- Step 4: Top each muffin half with 1 slice of bacon and 1 egg. Spoon the picante sauce mixture over the eggs and sprinkle with the cilantro.

Recipe Tips

- Tip: It's best to use fresh eggs when preparing poached eggs. They are less likely to break in the skillet.
