Los Angeles Giltinis Make Their Presence Known on the Field

First-Year South Bay-Based Pro Rugby Team Takes the League by Storm

By Duane Plank

I was fortunate to receive a tip from a gentleman I had profiled recently in the Herald, who brought to my attention that a new professional sports team, launching their inaugural season, was headquartered in and practiced in our fine city. Who knew?

Well, here is your introduction to the Los Angeles Giltinis (anyone knows what a Giltini is?), first-year members of the growing Major League Rugby enterprise, who are taking the league by storm, sitting, at the time of this submission, at the top of the league "table," and likely heading to the upcoming playoffs. Which for Americans means that they are in first place in the standings.

Full disclosure: I am a total rugby novice, trying to learn as much as possible about this great sport. So, if I bollocks up some of the nomenclature, positions, or terms, please accept, in advance, my apologies. The Giltini's players who I interviewed said, "no worry, mate!"

Longtime Herald readers may remember the wildly popular Frankly Plank column that debuted more than a decade ago, and dabbled in sports "hot-takes," and occasionally veered into other subjects. But I will admit, I never wrote about the great sport of rugby, which has been around the planet for, it seems, nearly 200 years. I believe I have a couple of somewhat distant relatives who matriculated to college and played rugby at No Cal rich-guy and girl universities, but I never paid much attention to their exploits as they did not mine.

As a rugby novice, I think that the only time I participated in an activity akin to rugby was back in the seventh grade while attending American Martyrs School in neighboring Manhattan Beach. After eating lunch, we would head out to the field and play a game we dubbed "Kill the Man with the Ball." OK, we did not set out to kill each other, but the chap who ended up with the ball, usually a football, was pummeled from all directions as the combatants tried to separate the ball carrier from the ball. Being a smart guy, it did not take me that long to discern that it was better to be one of the pummelers than the pummeled.

Enough digression. When I attended a Giltinis practice recently that took place on the artificial turf at Campus El Segundo, I was curious to discern what I would see? And what I saw was a whirlwind of activity from top-flight athletes, running to-and-fro from different practice stations, plying their trade as they prepared for their upcoming match at the Los Angeles Coliseum. That match against the hapless Houston SaberCats would end up in basically a walkover win, 52-5.

The following Sunday, the Giltinis took their show on the road to San Diego and prevailed in a much tighter contest against the home team, winning 19-13.

Here are some of the rugby rules that I have discerned: Players can run and kick the ball but can only pass it backward. There are three ways to score:

- A team gets five points for scoring a "try," where the ball is grounded over the opponent's in-goal area, like the goal-line in the NFL.

Bryan Grijalva Heals the Spirit

By Kiersten Vannest

"We have three bodies," says Bryan Grijalva, a healer located in El Segundo. The bodies he describes are the physical, the emotional, and the spiritual. Bryan, in particular, works to heal and strengthen the spiritual body.

"Think of an apple. When you see an apple, the skin is the physical body. You can see bruises, abrasions, broken arms, bleeding," he says. The physical body is most often attributed to western medicine, able to be treated in hospitals by medical doctors. "When we look a little bit deeper into the apple, the meat of it, that's the emotional body." This body is best served by psychologists, psychiatrists, and therapists. Emotional trauma may be healed through these methods or fortified. "But then, there's the issue of the spiritual body, which would be like the seeds of the apple... that's where I specialize," says Grijalva. Your spiritual body, as he describes it, can have blockages that can manifest in mental or physical health issues. His job is to find those blockages and help facilitate healing from the innermost body.

How can these three bodies coexist, or can they? Grijalva says absolutely. "It's never 'in lieu of,' it's always 'in conjunction with,'" he says, positing that spiritual healing is just the third piece of effective healing. According to him, the connection between the three (physical health, mental health, and spiritual health) is important and can produce some amazing changes.

Rise Again: Tulsa and the Red Summer Review: Bodies And Stories Were Buried—Until Now

By Morgan Rojas for Cinemacy

Throughout history, the United States has been the home of dozens of racially-fueled massacres that were never brought to light. One of the most egregious atrocities is the 1921 Tulsa, Oklahoma race massacre which saw an entire community burned down by white mobs. Over 300 black men, women, and children were killed and dumped in unmarked mass graves, their possessions stolen and dignity affected for generations. In the documentary Rise Again: Tulsa and the Red Summer, now streaming on Hulu, documentarian Dawn Porter sheds light on this horrific tragedy and challenges our idea of what justice looks like today. Make America great again? For a large majority of Tulsa Massacre victims and current Tulsa state officials, speak to the reality of what happened 100 years ago and how it is still affecting the black population today. It's uncomfortable to see just how dehumanizing the black community was made to feel at the hands of white people, but Dawn Porter educates viewers in a way that doesn't feel shameful or spiteful, just hopeful for a better future for all.

The term "Red Summer" was coined because the blood from black bodies flowed through the streets nonstop. Innocent black communities and individuals were targeted by white men who unjustly feared their jobs or lives were in danger, and were killed by the hundreds. Yet, these events have been minorities, America was never great before.

Dawn Porter is one of the most important working filmmakers today. She has her finger on the pulse of culturally significant stories about strong figures who stand up for what they believe in, even if it's against the status quo. Rise Again's message compliments Porter's previous work, including The Way I See It and John Lewis: Good Trouble. She is a natural storyteller who elicits empathy but never weakness from her subjects. Her delicate approach to such a heavy topic is a natural skill. Despite the death and destruction that permeates the narrative, Rise Again leaves us with an activated sense of introspection about how we can create a more just tomorrow.

For many people who lived through the 90s, the term "race riot" might bring to mind the horrific images of the Rodney King riots in Los Angeles. However, race riots have been around for decades, as documented in Rise Again's stark black and white photographs. The film centers around award-winning Washington Post journalist and Oklahoma native DeNeen Brown who, along with descendants of the historically left out of American history books because of shame and guilt. Pretending that these massacres never happened is equally offensive as the acts themselves, and that is why Rise Again: Tulsa and the Red Summer is so important to American cultural awareness. This film is an important piece of history. •

Your Neighborhood Therapist

Dear Neighborhood Therapist,

I have a twin sister and we've always been best friends. We live near each other and share everything in our lives. We are both married and have children. A month ago at a party my sister's husband made a pass at me when we were alone. I was shocked and confused, and I made it clear how upset I was. When we next spoke he said he had been drunk, he apologized profusely, and said it would never happen again. I don't know what to do. I've never kept a secret from my sister before. I do believe that telling my sister might lead to them getting divorced. I haven't told anyone and truly don't know what to do. What do you think?

— Agonizing, Santa Monica

Dear Agonizing,

I think it really stinks that this happened, to put it mildly, and I'm very sorry to hear it. It stinks that you need to do anything at all. Sadly, life throws stuff at us and sometimes we have to respond (in this case, doing nothing is also a response). You seem more concerned about your relationship with your sister than you do with the incident's immediate effects on you, so I will address that part.

I suspect you may feel like you have been forced into a situation where in order to preserve your sister's marriage you must lie to her and cover up her husband's act of aggression.

But of course for that to be true, then it also has to be true that because of something your brother-in-law did, the possible continued existence of a marriage that you are not a part of is suddenly entirely in your hands. Does that sound logical or reasonable to you? I didn't think so. It's a tense moment and it makes sense that you would feel a huge weight on your shoulders, but if the marriage ends, that's not on you.

I cannot tell you what to do, but I am confident you can reach a good sense of how to proceed according to your own values. My suggestion is to write down the answers to the following questions. Writing down the answers helps because the process of writing will help you clarify your thinking, and because it may be helpful to you in future conversations to have a record of your thought process.

First, you could have gone straight to your sister about this and let the chips fall where they may, but instead you chose to shoulder this burden, at least for a period of time. What is the thing that you are protecting by holding this secret? What does the fact that you have been able to hold this secret up until now say about what matters to you?

Which relationship is more important to you, and why: your relationship with your sister, or your sister's relationship with her husband? What do you need to do to tend to that relationship, and what are the potential costs of doing so, and are those costs worth it? (And sadly, there is always a cost.)

Next, what is the spectrum of possible explanations (not excuses) for what happened? Is the most generous view of your brother-in-law's behavior that perhaps it was a horrible, out-of-character, one-time mistake for which he feels genuine remorse? Good people do bad things all the time. Was this one of those times? On the other hand, was this incident totally in keeping with what you have seen and heard about him?

Finally, knowing everything that you know, if someone you cared about found herself in a situation where there was much uncertainty and seemingly no good options, how would you advise them to respond? Do that, and sleep well knowing you did the best you could.

5 Ways Small Businesses Can Thrive Into The Future

(BPT) - For the past year, the pandemic has disrupted the world - and small businesses are no exception. While navigating challenges, many small to medium-sized businesses (SMBs) discovered keys not only to survival, but to adapting and thriving. New research reveals what SMBs need to weather today's hardships - and future challenges.

Here are the top areas SMBs need to focus on.

1. Boost Cybersecurity with Smarter Technology

Technology company Lenovo's "Future of Work and Transformation Study" shows that while companies experienced a learning curve moving employees to remote work, businesses are leveraging smarter technology to increase IT security and empower employee productivity.

All companies have had to respond to the need for increased IT security and support for employees relying on home Wi-Fi networks. Employees using remotely-connected cloud and collaboration tools from their laptops or other devices on home Wi-Fi networks may increase the risk to data security, putting increased strain on IT department resources.

Lenovo's study found that although most SMBs subscribe to an IT security service, data security and compliance management remains a burden. Fortunately, most businesses recognized the need early, and 80% of them built strategies to keep things running, including plans for data security and redundancy. About 45% of businesses reported having cloud-based data backup, 39% had physical data backup and 39% provided data security training.

2. Ensure Employees Have the Necessary Tools

While many businesses played catch-up to ensure employees had the right tools to successfully work from home, others still don't have the right infrastructure for remote staff - which will likely continue to be essential to businesses.

The study found that cloud collaboration and software tools for videocalls and simultaneous document collaboration are essential for 97% of employees. Almost two-thirds of survey respondents also said these tools improved their productivity and efficiency.

3. Meet Consumer Demand for Omnichannel Ordering

Since lockdowns began, eCommerce and online ordering has increased dramatically - for everything from sporting goods and retail apparel to housewares and takeout meals. While some businesses - whether independent retailers or restaurants - have gone online for

• Two points are awarded to a team for a successful conversion. This is where a team can add further points after scoring a “try” by kicking the ball through the goalposts.

• A team can score three points if a penalty is awarded, and they successfully kick the ball through the goalposts.

• Three points are also given if a team does what is known as a dropkick, where a player drops the ball on the ground and kicks it through the goal post.

Rugby matches are played with 15 players on the field, with two halves of forty minutes and a 10-minute or so intermission. So, time-challenged (impatient) fans who do not cotton to spending four hours or so watching a Major League Baseball game, or waste 30 minutes viewing the final two minutes of an NBA playoff game, may appreciate the brevity of an MLR match, a contest highlighted by constant action.

As noted, there are 15 players on the pitch for each side. Some of the positions manned include a loose-head prop, tight head prop, a couple of flankers, #8, a scrum-half, a fly-half, an inside center, an outside center, a right-wing, a fullback, and the all-important hooker.

It is way past my nascent understanding of the sport to explain what each player’s duties are, but suffice to say, each player’s expertise is an integral component that meshes to build a successful team.

Time to meet your 2021 Los Angeles Giltinis... Well, two of them.

DTH van der Merwe is a Giltinis outside back/winger, a position he equates to the wide receiver position in the NFL. He goes by DTH, which are his father’s initials. And he happened to be born on the same calendar day as his dad. Born and initially raised in South Africa, he moved to Canada when he was 17, where his rugby career accelerated. He played with the Canadian National team, as well as in a rugby World Cup in Dubai.

His sterling play on the pitch was spotted by a Scotland talent scout, which led to him begin a new sporting adventure, playing for 11 years in Scotland, Wales, and England.

When COVID-19 hit, DTH said that he was contacted by a former Canadian player who was associated with soon-to-be Giltinis head coach Darren Coleman.

DTH was pitched about setting up camp in Southern California and playing for the start-up Giltinis. It must have been a potent sales pitch. He and his family, who live in Hermosa Beach, have not regretted their relocation. “We have fallen in love with the South Bay,” DTH said. “We have lots of wheels spinning,” he said, “in how we could stay here forever.”

As a somewhat older player (35), DTH said he and his family are looking to a future in Southern California, post-rugby. He said that he is a “qualified firefighter” and will probably be looking to pursue opportunities in that occupation.

When asked how a rugby neophyte fan should learn about and embrace the sport, DTH noted that his father, back in the day, had acquired the book “Rugby for Dummies,” a book that I should purchase. But DTH also touted attending a game at the Coliseum, as well as checking out the online feeds of MLR games that are available for free or dropping in to view a match on the Bally’s Sports Network, which broadcasts contests each weekend.

Like all associated with the Giltinis, DTH embraces being an ambassador for promoting rugby to gain a foothold in America. “Spread the word,” he said. “Why not give it a shot, and support the Giltinis?”

Which is a sentiment shared by his teammate, Dave Dennis. Dennis plays the “lock” position on the pitch, which he equates to the tight-end slot on an NFL offense. The Australian native said he “never thought he would end up in the South Bay.” When his contract ran out while he was playing in England last year, Dennis, also 35, said he received a call from a Giltinis assistant coach, a former teammate, trying to coerce Dennis and family to relocate to Southern California.

Again, the sales pitch worked. “Why not?” Dennis, who lives in Redondo Beach, said. “It was a good opportunity to enjoy everything that California has to offer and play some rugby.”

Typically, professional expansion teams struggle during their first year, but not the Giltinis. And a lot of their success apparently stems from management selecting an internationally experienced head coach, Darren Coleman.

Dennis noted that Coleman has a stellar coaching resume, guiding teams that may have underperformed before his arrival at the top of the standings table. He said that Coleman’s coaching style gets his team well-prepared for the next match, “but we also have a lot of fun.”

When he is not rousting about with his family or speeding up-and-down the rugby pitch, Dennis says he enjoys cooking, as well as sharpening his skills on the local golf courses. He noted he forayed south two weeks ago to watch the opening round of the United States Open golf tournament. How good is Dennis on the course? He said he plays to a handicap of 8, “good enough to earn a little money from the boys” should friendly wagers be placed.

When asked to sum up a rugby match, Dennis said it is “15 guys running at each other, trying to score more points at the other end of the field. You bash the hell out of each other, and then go have a cold beer.”

OK, so I am assuming that you still do not have a clue as to what a Giltini is? Well, it is an adult beverage named partially after/by club backer Australian entrepreneur Adam Gilchrist, who, I have been informed, made his fortune as a gym owner. The team’s name, Giltinis, melds Gil with martini. Get it? And according to DTH, the beverage should be available this summer in local South Bay imbibing establishments. Gilchrist also happens to own another MLR team named after an adult beverage, the Austin Gilgronis, that plays off of the first three letters of his last name, as well as another adult beverage.

The MLR regular season concludes on the weekend of July 17/18. And if all goes according to plan, the Giltinis will continue their winning ways and glide into the playoffs. So, with the El Segundo-based LA Lakers and Kings long-ago dispatched from championship competition, you might consider taking the time to support a professional team who may bring another title to our jewel of a town.

Bryan Grijalva

Grijalva himself is certified and practices over two dozen healing modalities. This ranges from simply talking to a client, to analyzing chakra charts, to exercising reiki to free up blockages and increase chi flow.

Grijalva explains that we all have an essence of energy and life that flows through all of our bodies for those who don't know what any of that means. This is the chi flow. Sometimes we have traumas, physical, emotional, or spiritual, resulting in illnesses, struggles, or just generally feeling "off." Chakras, he explains, are essentially different energy centers in your body that correlate to certain nerve bundles and organs. Healthy chakras are open and balanced. Reiki is a type of massage in which the massage therapist doesn't actually touch the client, but channels energy through themselves and into the client. Clients report feeling warm or sometimes slight pressure when undergoing energy healing.

Despite his passion and experience, Grijalva was not always a spiritual healer. "I actually used to own an auto shop, and I was quite happy," he laughs. During this time, his sister began to develop debilitating migraines. When medicine wasn't working, and she felt at a loss, he felt helpless. So he signed himself up for massage school to see if he could alleviate any of her pain. Massage school led deeper into energy studies and eventually holistic healing. Fifteen years later, he teaches classes out of El Segundo and sees clients regularly.

Grijalva is also what he calls a medical intuitive. This essentially means that with meditation, through a process called synchronization, he can feel a client's pain in his own body. This helps him to empathize with his client and better understand where blockages may be occurring. Thankfully, he says, this is something he has largely learned to manage so that he isn't walking around feeling the pains of everyone around him in Los Angeles.

How does one know if this is a field they could enter? Grijalva says he believes these abilities are implicit in everyone, though some have to work harder at it than others. As for him, he describes feeling this from the time of childhood. "As a child, I was very sick all the time, but realizing it wasn't mine. It took a while to get a hold of it, and I do see a lot of sensitive children experience it quite a bit," he says. Part of his work is helping to teach children about empathy and helping adults sort out what pain is theirs and what is external. By realizing what is yours and what is not, he says, you can begin to open your mind and help others.

In the past year, a common issue he's dealt with during his consultations has been everything related to the pandemic and the lockdown. From loneliness to loss, his spiritual healing has been focused often on anxiety and depression lately, though he says every client is completely different and is treated individually.

With his studio, Sacred Circle, opening up again soon, he hopes to resume a practice of a monthly sound bath, which works to bring vibrations into the body, and can quiet the mind or bring emotions to the forefront, depending on the kind of sound bath and individual reaction to different vibrations. He says that taking in other people's pain and constantly working through roadblocks and struggles can be very physically and emotionally exhausting. But on days he feels burned out and is ready to throw in the towel, he'll hear from a client who says that a huge problem they never thought they'd ever been able to deal with or cure is completely gone, and his dedication to the craft is renewed.

"That to me," he says, "that's worth more than all the money in the world: to hear how someone has healed themselves or to have helped facilitate their healing." Grijalva's hopes that holistic healing will be more generally accepted in the future. "I'm not a doctor. I don't pretend to be. But there are so many things that are not medical or physical in nature; they're spiritual. That is what I'm trying to do: help people understand that we are spiritual creatures, and we can address our spiritual concerns in a safe and healthy way. Then we can really facilitate true healing." • the first time, others worked to optimize their existing online ordering systems, taking into consideration order flow, packaging, delivery systems and end-user experience.

Consumer behavior has quickly changed in surprising ways. Data from a recent study by Lightspeed, a leading provider of cloud-based, omnichannel commerce platforms, shows how online ordering for restaurants in large suburbs grew by a whopping 3,868% between February and April 2020, as commuter patterns changed and restaurants identified opportunities outside urban centers.

In both the retail and hospitality industries, consumer appetite for online ordering is here to stay. In fact, a recent study from Google showed that 61% of shoppers prefer an omnichannel experience that unifies the physical and digital shopping experience, with the ability to order online at their convenience and shop in-person when they need an item immediately.

4. Diversify Revenue Streams and Shore Up Supply Chains

In an unpredictable economy, it's important to make sure the entirety of your business is as resilient and flexible as possible. Many restaurants from the Lightspeed study added new merchandise, subscription boxes, to-go beverages gift cards, online classes and donation options to their online ordering menus, with great success. These are tactics that restaurants powered by Lightspeed in economies such as Australia and New Zealand maintained even after diners enthusiastically returned to indoor dining.

5. Leverage Social Media to Grow Community

Lightspeed believes that commerce ignites community and the company's recent study also found restaurants that were able to grow their revenue by more than 100% in 2020 maintained a robust social media presence and marketing strategy to connect with local neighborhood diners. These thriving restaurateurs found ways to give back, reward customer loyalty and partner with other local businesses to build a broader customer base.

For independent businesses, surviving - and thriving - despite daunting challenges requires agility, plus the know-how to leverage all available technology tools. •

CITY OF INGLEWOOD DATE: June 29, 2021 TO: Inglewood Residents & Business FROM: Inglewood Public Works Department

Continued Public Hearing on July 20, 2021 for adopting 2020 Urban Water Management Plan

The City of Inglewood provides water services to approximately 85,000 customers through 15,700 service connections within its service area of 7.2 square miles. The remaining customers are serviced by the Golden State Water Company or Cal America Water Company. The City service area is divided into three pressure zones for elevation differences that vary from 60 to 247 feet above sea level. The City's water production system consists of four active wells and the Water Treatment Plant. The City provides approximately 8,982 acre-feet of potable water to its customers every year. Of the 8,982 acre-feet of potable water served, 3,400 acre-feet are produced by City wells, and 5,582 acre-feet are purchased from the Metropolitan Water District via West Basin Municipal Water District (WBMWD). In addition, from WBMWD, City provides 686 acre-feet of recycled water to a few particular customers: Inglewood Cemetery and Hollywood Park, and City facilities.

The State of California Urban Water Management Planning Act of 1983 (Act) requires urban water suppliers servicing 3,000 or more connections or supplying more than 3,000 acre-feet of water annually to submit a Urban Water Management Plan (UWMP). The State of California, through the California Water Code Division 6, Part 2.6, Sections 10610 to 10657, declares that each local government shall adopt a UWMP to help the State in implementing the plan and protect the interest of the people, business sector, and the economic climate. UWMPs are prepared by urban water suppliers every five years. These plans support the suppliers' long-term resource planning to ensure that adequate water supplies are available to meet existing and future water needs.

- Within UWMPs, urban water suppliers must:
• Assess the reliability of water sources over a 20-year planning time frame
• Describe demand management measures and water shortage contingency plans
• Report progress toward meeting a targeted 20 percent reduction in per-capita (per-person) urban water consumption by the year 2020
• Discuss the use and planned use of recycled water

Adopting the UWMP is required for the City to be eligible for State grants, loans, and assistance. City submitted its first UWMP to Department of Water Resources (DWR) in 1985, and updated plans were submitted in 1990, 1995, 2000, 2005, 2010, and 2015. Pursuant to the Act, the City Council will consider public comments received, and any comments received will be noted in the final document to be filed with DWR.

Note: The UWMP 2020 with 1,146 pages are available on City of Inglewood City Website for review. Hard copy are also available to public at Inglewood Public Works Department. Inglewood Daily News Pub. 7/1, 7/8/21

Puff Pastry Ice Cream Sandwiches

Provided by Campbell Soup Company

Once you make these ice cream sandwiches you'll never want store bought again. Puff pastry replaces the boring cookies and we've created a simple method that turns flaky pastry into crisp, crunchy goodness. It's puff pastry like you've never tasted before. Make a bunch and keep them tightly wrapped in the freezer for a quick treat.

Ingredients

- 2 tablespoons all-purpose flour
- 1/2 of a 17.3-ounce package Pepperidge Farm® Puff Pastry Sheets (1 sheet), thawed
- 3 cups ice cream (use your favorite flavor or an assortment of flavors), softened

Recipe Tips

- Tip: To make ahead, you can wrap the frozen sandwiches (after the 1 hour freeze in the last step) in waxed paper or plastic wrap and store them in the freezer for up to a week.

Directions

- Step 1: Heat the oven to 375°F. Line 1 baking sheet with parchment paper (When it's time to bake, you will need 1 additional baking sheet and parchment paper).
- Step 2: Sprinkle the flour on the work surface. Unfold the pastry sheet on the work surface. Roll the pastry sheet into an 11x14-inch rectangle. Place the pastry onto a parchment paper-lined baking sheet and top with another layer of parchment paper and another baking sheet (This will create a thin, crispy pastry when baked).
- Step 3: Bake for 25 minutes, removing the top baking sheet and parchment during the last 5 minutes of the baking time. Remove the baking sheet from the oven and place on a wire rack. Replace the second baking sheet to keep the pastry from curling as it cools. Let the pastry cool completely.
- Step 4: Cut the pastry into 12 (3 1/2-inch) squares. Spread 1/2 cup ice cream onto each of 6 pastries. Top with the remaining pastries. If desired, dip the edges of the sandwiches in sprinkles, chopped nuts, crushed pretzels or whatever you like to coat the ice cream. Place on baking sheets and freeze for 1 hour or until firm.

He is full of energy and loves to greet his foster mom with a cry

Ash is very sweet and active. He typically enjoys being commingled with other cats once he gets used to them. But he can be a solo cat as well. Ash loves to play with wand toys and will entertain you for hours. He is a “great goalie” catching toys in the air and trapping them on the ground. He has not been around children or dogs. He loves to be pet and lick treats right from the back of your hand. His sweet purr sounds similar to a pigeon cooing.

Mango was found in a garage with five other kittens and two mama cats. We do not know which mama cat he belonged to, as they were co-parenting and both nursing all the kittens. Mango loved attention from the beginning and follows the humans around the house. He loves roughhousing with his siblings and would most likely do well with other cats. This sweet little boy is inquisitive and likes to explore the house. He will be a wonderful addition to your family.

These cats and kittens are available for adoption through Kitten Rescue, one of the largest cat rescue groups in Southern California. All our kitties are spayed/neutered, microchipped, tested for FeLV and FIV, dewormed and current on their vaccinations. For additional information and to see these or our other kittens and cats, please check our website www.kittenrescue.org.

Our Adoption Center is temporarily closed. In the meantime, we are still conducting contactless adoptions using all the online tools at our disposal. To virtually browse our adoptable cats, please visit our Adoption Gallery where you can find photos and profiles of all the cats and kittens we have up for adoption from our network of foster homes and from the Sanctuary. At the end of each cat's profile is a link to the email address of the foster parent or adoption counselor, and you may reach out directly with questions or to arrange a virtual meeting.

The donations and support we receive from individuals like you, who share our love and commitment to helping cats and kittens in Los Angeles, are the sole reason we are able to do what we do. We are grateful for your financial help. By making even a small donation today, you can touch the lives of the many deserving, wonderful animals in our care. There are many ways you can donate and help, and every dollar means so much. Kitten Rescue is a 501(c)(3) nonprofit. Your
