The Hollywood Park Welcomes New State-of-the-Art Technology

A global leader in experiential media and immersive technology, COSM recently celebrated their development milestone with a traditional “topping off” ceremony, where the last or tallest beam is placed on a project. The Hollywood Park location will be the first venue of its kind to bring entertainment to life by utilizing Cosm’s revolutionary domed and compound curved LED technology. Guests will be able to directly experience immersive content through the company’s proprietary, best-in-class technology that seamlessly bridges the gap between virtual and physical realities. The 65,000-square-foot venue will be able to hold up to 1,700 people and is scheduled to open in 2024. Photo courtesy City of Inglewood.

Glad You Decided to Stay Awhile

By Ron Sokol

Ok, let me ask: Are there some jobs you definitely would not be thrilled about? Plumber? That’s interesting, but you know you can provide some real help as a plumber.

Tollbooth? Yep, that would be monotonous. Window cleaner at the Empire State Building? Agree. Too scary!

Matador? Just so risky. Chief of Police? Well, in this day and age, with all the controversy swirling about police officers, and the constant dangers... That job would not be near the top of my preferred list, let’s put it that way.

Except, there’s a fellow named Gary Tomatani, who became Chief of Police of the Hawthorne Police Department in March, a few months ago now. “Twenty-nine and a half years... Where did all the time go? I graduated from UC Irvine in 1993 as a social ecology major. The Hawthorne Police Department gave me a shot right out of college as a police recruit. I graduated from the Long Beach Police Academy in 1994, and here I am today.”

(Note to reader: Chief Tomatani is easy to talk with. He is affable, often enough, and seems comfortable as the Chief of Police. I can’t see, find or even really sense any cracks in the armor. So, maybe being Chief of Police is not such a bad gig after all.)

“There was one time in my entire career during which the City was having particularly serious financial concerns. The City Chief told all of us if we could leave, if any of us decided to leave, to let him know which other police departments we would try to become part of. He would seek to ensure that we at least received consideration from the department head in each instance. I thought it all out, including the expression ‘last hired, first fired.’ I was really having some qualms about staying. As it turns out, though, enough people senior to me were able to join other departments, so I took a deep breath and decided to stay...”

(Next note to reader: I find myself wanting to refer to the Chief as Gary, which is his first name, but I think it is more appropriate to utilize his formal title.)

I sat with the Chief in his office at the Hawthorne Police Department and spent two hours addressing a variety of topics. It was a Monday morning. Chief Tomatani told me how much he learned from prior Chiefs of Police and then remarked: “You have to embrace a theme and a focus. I am avidly looking at ways to leverage technology in an effort to decrease conflict between the Department’s staff and the public. In fact, I am hoping to pursue a de-escalation policy.”

The Chief explained that a useful asset could well be drones. “An officer has a drone in the trunk of their car. Typically, a call comes in. Let’s say a robbery is reported at a liquor store, and an officer speeds over. A drone can get there very quickly and first show the officer what is going on, perhaps where the suspect is, and whether the situation actually is urgent or not as bad as it sounds.”

The Chief mentioned an incident called into him just the day before (Sunday, which was supposed to be “a day off”). It sounded very serious, but when investigated was not nearly as significant or problematic as first reported. “A drone could have scoped all of that out in advance.”

Police Chief Gary Tomatani

Chief Tomatani also spoke about technology that allows anyone with a surveillance camera system to provide the police real access to camera feeds. “This can come into play even when a silent alarm goes off. Having a good sense of the scene, as soon as possible, once a report or alarm comes in, the officer may be able to avoid a number of risks, including risks to the community. We cannot just rely on what has been accomplished. We must explore new ways to do things. We strive to keep both our sworn and professional staff engaged, consistent with the goals of both the City and the Department. This means preventing crime, increasing safety and security, and being a professional and efficient law enforcement agency. The drones and technology lend themselves to that, as does Coffee with a Cop, our Facility Dog Program, the Department’s participation in Movies in the Park, the Ride to Live instruction, and tactical first aid. We want an environment so

Theater Camp Is A Delightfully Entertaining Musical Mockumentary

By Ryan Rojas, Cinemacy.com

The world of musical theater is full of such laughably pretentious pomp and over-the-top circumstances that it makes itself quite an easy target to parody. Who would be better to satirize this insular and absurd world than theater kids themselves?

Turning their 2020 short film of the same name into a feature-length film, Ben Platt and Molly Gordon star as insufferably artsy camp counselors overseeing the production of an original musical in the new comedy, Theater Camp. Directed by Gordon and Nick Lieberman, Theater Camp uses the mockumentary format to satirize the world of theater and its extremely passionate performers.

It's the start of another summer, and eager young campers and budding Broadway hopefuls merrily sing show tunes as they bus it to upstate New York, en route to their beloved haven for thespians: the "AdirondACTS" theater camp. This year, however, will be different: the camp's idolized leader, Joan Rubinsky (Amy Sedaris), has fallen into a coma (which the film sets up as a humorous plot point). Taking over is her "crypto-bro" son, Troy (Jimmy Tatro), who must keep the musical theater paradise of which he knows nothing about running. With his bro vibes, he soon learns that the camp is in a dire financial situation. With no experience and fewer brain cells, it's up to him to secretly find a way to keep the camp afloat.

Meanwhile, head counselors Amos Klobuchar (Ben Platt) and Rebecca-Diane (Molly Gordon) are tasked with writing and directing an original musical theater production (one that will be a life's tribute to their unconscious icon). What follows is a series of sketches, skits, and bits that poke fun at the entire process of putting on a show. Auditioning, songwriting, acting exercises, stunt training, rehearsal, and finally, the opening night performance is not spared from spoofing.

Written by Gordon, Lieberman, and Noah Galvin (Platt's real-life partner), Theater Camp, is a light, silly, altogether enjoyable watch that will surely delight theater kid obsessives (but might not connect with those who aren't as invested in the inner world). The mockumentary nature allows for a loose and (likely) highly improvised nature. Platt, Gordon, and Galvin (who plays a stage manager yearning for the spotlight) create an easy chemistry together. However, after a little while, the tone of the humor does become a little one-note. When every character modulates at the same level of sarcasm, it can start to feel a bit excessive.

I didn't have overwhelmingly high expectations going in, and Theater Camp exceeded those, being much funnier than I thought it would be. The film is produced by Gloria Sanchez Productions, the sister label production company of Will Ferrell and Adam McKay's Gary Sanchez Productions, with a focus on female voices in comedy.

1h 34m. 'Theater Camp' starts playing in select cities Friday, July 14.

What Can I Say?: A Kid's Guide to Super-Useful Social Skills to Help You Get Along, and Express Yourself by Catherine Newman

By Kristen Morell, Librarian I

This week I will be reviewing What Can I Say?: A Kid's Guide to Super-Useful Social Skills to Help You Get Along, and Express Yourself by Catherine Newman. This book is an excellent choice for upper elementary and middle school students who are interested in learning more about how to navigate social situations. Some adults may even find this book helpful! If your tween or teen would like to practice their social skills, learn how to be a good friend or make new friends, this book will offer tips on how to do so with examples of dialogue and great illustrations that demonstrate facial expressions as well.

The examples provided almost read like a simple script which makes them easy to for readers to remember and try out in real life situations. Examples of the topics covered in this book include how to meet and greet, how to have a conversation, how to get along with people, how to deal with hard things, how to be in a romantic relationship (or not), how to be supportive, how to be an ally, and how to care for your community. The book also covers tips on how to compose an email which I think is very useful for students now that many assignments are completed online. Another enjoyable factor about this book is that even though it covers serious topics it is funny and all of the great illustrations make it almost read like a graphic novel. To check out this book and others like it, visit us at the El Segundo Public Library!

How People With Diabetes Can Access Affordable Insulin

(BPT) - If you or someone you love has diabetes, you already know how essential insulin is for managing the disease every day. Today, 8.4 million Americans rely on insulin to manage their diabetes, making access to this crucial medication more important than ever.

In March of 2023, Lilly announced plans to reduce the cost of its most commonly prescribed insulins and automatically cap out-of-pocket insulin costs at $35 per month at participating retail pharmacies for people with commercial insurance, to help make it easier for people who use Lilly insulin - regardless of insurance status - to access this crucial medication.*

"Earlier this year, we further delivered on our commitment to provide affordable insulin for people with diabetes by making it easier for people to access Lilly insulin for $35 through an automated cap at the pharmacy for people with commercial insurance, so that people who use Lilly insulin can access it for no more than $35 per monthly prescription," said Mike Mason, executive vice president and president, Lilly Diabetes and Obesity.

How The Insulin Cap Works

Making insulin affordable for people living with diabetes has always been a top priority for Lilly. With this latest initiative, Lilly is automatically capping out-of-pocket costs for its insulin at $35 per monthly prescription for people with commercial insurance. This means that the $35 per month cap is implemented automatically at participating retail pharmacies for people with commercial insurance.

But even if you don't have insurance, or do not use a participating pharmacy, you can still get Lilly insulin for $35 per month. Simply go to InsulinAffordability.com and download the Lilly Insulin Value Program savings card.

Through these actions, Lilly continues to make it easier for people with diabetes to access affordable insulin.

Spread The Word With #Tapthecap And Help Kids With Diabetes

To help ensure that people with diabetes know how to access affordable insulin, Lilly is teaming up with the American Diabetes Association (ADA) and professional baseball player Adam Duvall to launch a nationwide effort called "Tap the Cap" to increase awareness of insulin affordability solutions for people living with diabetes.

people want to work here, which is why we strive to do things that larger agencies do not.”

After meeting with the Chief, I did some reading and found that the Hawthorne Police Department refers to itself as: “A progressively modern police agency with a renowned family feel.” Then, even with all the responsibility he shoulders and the goals he embraces for the Department, Chief Tomatani emphasized that his time now is limited by the importance of not getting in the way of a successor. “When there is a good person or good people waiting in line, don’t overstay your welcome,” the Chief states very plainly.

In sum: Gary Tomatani, a career police officer and a dedicated and proud member of the Hawthorne Police Department, at any given time, is thinking about: (a) how to prevent crime, (b) how to deal with crime as expeditiously and effectively as possible, (c) how to build upon the excellent legacy of his predecessors, (d) promoting ways to make sure Hawthorne PD is a place where people truly want to work (even if the benefits may not equal the highest), and (e) the best way to map out his time as Chief, so that when he passes the baton to the next Chief, it is done in a way that keeps the Hawthorne Police Department strong, compassionate and effective.

(Final note to reader: Now you know where the title of this column came from. And, I will ask: If you get the opportunity to talk with Chief Tomatani one day, drop me a note. Let me know if you have ever met a more thoughtful and engaging person.) •

Looking For A New Career? This Is Why The Skilled Trades Offer Great Opportunities

(BPT) - For anyone seeking a career that's in demand and offers a wide variety of positions, the skilled trades and construction should be at the top of your list. Whether you're interested in construction, architecture and design, technology, finance, business administration, sales or HR, the array of jobs available in the field may help you find your perfect fit.

Because the skilled trades are in such high demand and the construction field is so vast, the sheer variety of positions allows not only for many different entry points into the industry, but also plenty of opportunities for advancement. At companies like 84 Lumber, the largest privately held building materials supplier in the nation, opportunities are varied and financially rewarding for people with or without college degrees.

“The opportunities are endless. Team members have started in the warehouse/yard and are now leaders within 84 Lumber,” observed Joe Jena, director of talent acquisition. “Careers in the skilled trades are valued, as we would not be able to live our everyday lives without them.”

Another advantage is that once you've acquired experience in one sector, you can go on to learn other aspects of the industry, then advance to a supervisory role or even work toward owning your own business.

"The skilled trades provide not only an excellent career path with job stability, but also supports a person with entrepreneurial aspirations," said Ken Kucera, vice president of installed sales and manufacturing, 84 Lumber.

Possibly the biggest benefit rests in how vital these roles are in society. "The genuine lack of skilled tradespeople is creating a dearth of labor, and a huge opportunity for those willing to learn new skills. There simply aren't enough skilled workers to keep the economy running if we don't fill those roles," said Matt Pabis, general manager of the truss plant in Coal Center, Pennsylvania, for 84 Lumber. While some positions in the field may benefit from the education a four-year degree provides, most jobs are attainable with an associate's degree, technical school certification or even just via on-the-job training.

"My college education was beneficial for the current role I hold. Having studied logistics, supply chain management, operations, inventory, etc. definitely gave me the foundation to build on in taking this role," added Pabis. "But on-the-job training was integral in my advancement as a truss designer."

If you're on the fence about what kind of education you'll need to succeed in a career, it's worth weighing the cost and the time commitment of a four-year degree, along with the potential return on that investment.

"While a majority of recent graduates decide to pursue an education at a four-year school, skilled trades development is a lot quicker and, in most cases, provides the same type of return and faster opportunity to start advancing in a career," explained Mauricio Bleichner, recruiting lead-components for 84 Lumber. "We encourage individuals to develop their skills with comprehensive training in carpentry, machine maintenance and architectural drafting.

These types of positions are in such high demand that many employers will provide or support ongoing education to ensure that every employee can succeed, even if they begin with little to no experience or education under their belt.

Wherever you are in your career path, it's worthwhile to pursue a job in a field that will always be needed. "Skilled trades are in demand and will always be essential to society," added Lemoi. "Skilled tradespeople are shaping the future of our world, one project at a time." Learn more about career possibilities at Careers.84Lumber.com.

tional burden that living with diabetes can have," said Duvall, who was diagnosed with Type 1 diabetes in 2012. "The last thing a person should have to worry about is how to get affordable insulin, and that's why I'm glad to be helping to make sure people know how easy it is to 'Tap the Cap.'"

To encourage people to spread the word about how to access their insulin for $35 or less per month, Lilly invites everyone to share a photo on Instagram or Facebook with the #TaptheCap filter and the hashtag #TaptheCap.

For every post with this hashtag, Lilly will make a contribution to ADA's summer camps across the U.S. These camps support the unique care needs of children living with diabetes, offering the opportunity to make lifelong
