The Dodger Dream Team Comes to the South Bay Community

Dodgers and fans come together at Holly Park. To read more about the Dodger Foundation, see story below. Photo by Ron Sokol..

A Very Special Day in the Park

Story and Photos by Ron Sokol

You may recall last month we were having June gloom. The sky was often overcast, gray, and unwelcoming. While summer was almost at hand, the temperature was a bit chilly.

But, then, in short order, none of that mattered at all one day. Blue took over – Dodger blue, that is! Right here in the South Bay, at wonderful Holly Park, the Dodger Foundation – through its sports-based youth development program, proudly known as Dodgers Dream Team – brought Dodger Days to the community.

Kids of all ages were out in force. Young kids indeed, but also moms and dads, grandmas and grandpas, aunts and uncles (and even a columnist from Herald Publications, yours truly). You see, I wanted to cover the event because the Dodgers helped sponsor the local Little League. Just to be clear, my being there had very little to do with being a lifelong Dodger fan who grew up with Vin Scully in his ear. The huge smile on my face was probably just because I'd had a very strong cup of coffee before arriving. That's all.

There were a number of former Dodger players in attendance, including Billy Ashley and Dennis Powell. They posed for photographs, signed baseballs, shirts, paper, and whatever was handed to them, and gave kind, patient, and helpful instruction to future major leaguers (boys and girls alike, of course).

You could feel the fun, the excitement, and the joy. To add to the festivities was an excellent sound system and very upbeat music. Also, just to be on the safe side, two of Hawthorne's finest from the Police Department casually strolled in and around Holly Park. Everyone nodded or waved to them. They were as well received as the Dodgers themselves, which brought a tear to my eye, but that was probably just a seasonal allergy, nothing more.

The Dodger mascot was everywhere. Smiling, clapping or waving his hands, mugging, dancing, cheering, hugging, and doing what mascots do: Keeping spirits high. Some of the supportive organizations there, who played a role in this community gathering, were California Pizza Kitchen, UCLA Health, Arco, Warehouse Shoe Sale, Vision to Learn, and the LA Food Bank. There were a lot of giveaways: Bats, backpacks, baseballs, and Dodger dogs, among other goodies.

"Um, can I have a hot dog?" She looked at me a bit perplexed and then blurted out: "Sir, you look like you're starving... You sure you don't want two?" (Confession, but between us only: I love Dodger dogs. Not too long ago, the Farmer John's hot dogs that were standard at Dodger Stadium were replaced by another brand. Please note that I may have real expertise when it comes to Dodger dogs, having eaten them over the course of

The Deepest Breath Tells a Bittersweet Story of Two Sea-Bound Soulmates

By Morgan Rojas for Cinemacy

Every decision we make on this earth, whether on land or sea, is left to some degree of chance. Even with years of experience, we can never truly predict with full certainty the outcome of a situation. Yet in some ways, this unpredictability is part of the beauty of life.

The Deepest Breath, courtesy Netflix.

Happenstance is what brought Alessia Zecchini and Stephen Keenan together, and fate is why their story is so painstakingly tragic. To bring this story to life, director Laura McGann takes audiences on an emotionally-stirring and reflective journey throughout the lives of these two sea-bound soulmates in the documentary The Deepest Breath, now streaming on Netflix.

On the surface, The Deepest Breath can be described as a tragic love story between a world-champion Italian freediver, Alessia Zecchini, and her Irish safety expert coach, Stephen Keenan. But dive a little deeper, and you'll soon discover that it's so much more than that. This film tells a poignant story about pushing the limits of the human body – mentally and physically – and the vulnerability that it takes to surrender everything in the name of love.

From the very first frame, audiences are submerged into the little-known world of freediving. Don't be surprised if you catch yourself attempting to hold your breath simultaneously with the divers on screen, as I subconsciously did. My pathetic 45 seconds compared to their nearly four minutes is laughable, and really puts into perspective why freediving is highly considered by many athletes to be the most dangerous sport in the world.

Alessia Zecchini meets this challenge head-on as she competes for the title of world champion freediver. Her dedication to the sport is admirable, if not foolish at times. Throughout the film, we witness her compete in different exotic tropical locations, whose beauty is often overshadowed by the deadly activity happening underneath the water. Plunging hundreds of feet downward with a single breath leads to occasional blackouts, where bodies are pulled to the surface by expert divers and given lifesaving treatments like CPR. Given the circumstances, there is no doubt that the bond between a diver and their safety expert is a precious one. Alessia and Stephen prove this ten times over throughout the film and their intimate moments are such a privilege to witness.

The crux of The Deepest Breath takes place in the moments between an inhale and an exhale. A mere matter of seconds can feel like a lifetime when one is submerged hundreds of feet in the ocean. Director Laura McGann has complete control of the emotional power of the story, which is complemented by the beautifully layered score by Nainita Desai. Produced by John Battsek of Ventureland, in association with A24, Motive Films, and RAW, The Deepest Breath is a full-bodied viewing experience and an incredible homage to those who are willing to risk it all for their dream. •

Birnam Wood by Eleanor Catton

Written by the Booker Prize winning novelist of The Luminaries and screenwriter for the recent movie iteration of Austen's Emma, Eleanor Catton has produced another winner in Birnam Wood. Catton was raised in New Zealand and has based this novel on the country's South Island. She knows the political, social, and economic terrain of New Zealand and uses it to great effect here.

Birnam Wood by Eleanor Catton.

Birnam Wood is a guerilla gardening collective that plants gardens along roadways and on abandoned or unused plots of land, sometimes legal, sometimes not. Mira is a trained horticulturist and an arrogant, insecure renegade. Her best friend Shelley has tired of Mira's condescension and the unremitting cloud of financial insecurity, moral outrage and legal threat that hangs over the co-op. Birnam Wood is on the edge of collapse, as is the relationship between Mira and Shelley. Shelley wants out but knows the collective would not withstand her loss. Her feelings of resentment, guilt, and frustration have narrowed to focus on Mira.

A recent earthquake on undeveloped land has provided an unprecedented opportunity for Birnam Wood. The road is impassible and has walled off hundreds of acres of land, perfect for establishing a large, self-sustaining garden. By the time the infrastructure is repaired, Birnam Wood will have proven themselves as an environmental and ecological success, producing enough output to keep them solvent. Banking on the assumption that no one will notice, Birnam Wood moves in and begins their clandestine operation.

When Mira stumbles onto a private jet, she meets Robert Lemoine, an enigmatic American billionaire. Lemoine claims to be building an underground bunker on the land both he and Mira are trespassing upon. Mira wonders why are there armed guards and surveillance drones? Why all the secrecy? As they explore the inexplicable attraction between polar opposites, Mira realizes she is no match for the powerful, narcissistic Lemoine. Both Mira and Lemoine are skilled at keeping secrets and they will do whatever it takes to protect their interests, despite the devastation left in their wake.

And, for the record, Dodger dogs must be very good nutrition because I always feel so much better after I eat one!

Now, back to the Dodger Foundation. Here is their impressive statement: “We envision a city where everyone, regardless of ZIP code, has the opportunity to thrive.

Through a social justice lens, we run and fund proven programs that level the playing field and invest in solutions driven by the communities we serve.”

You can find information about the Dodger Foundation online at: <https://www.mlb.com/dodgers/community/foundation>. There are future Dodger Days scheduled -- July 29, 2023 at Belvedere Park in Los Angeles, and August 5, 2023 at Heartwell Park in Long Beach.

For Dodger Days to come together in our community last month, a whole lot of hands were on deck (no pun intended). I mentioned some of them above. Gerry Iriate, Recreation Specialist with the City of Hawthorne, pointed out that Boombox Entertainment had a lot to do with the organization and logistics of the event. Bank of America provided dozens of volunteers. In addition, the City of Hawthorne made Holly Park available, as well as the sound system, canopies, tables, chairs, buckets for drinks, ice, and parking.

In attendance was what I would call a “grandstand of fans.” Not just fans of the Dodgers, but fans of good fun, good giveaways, and promising opportunities. With the passage of time, it will be July when this column is published. The sun has been with us a bunch more since June. I would not be surprised if that had something to do with the sun itself not wanting to miss the next Dodger Days. I mean, why miss out on something so fun? In fact, if I were the sun, I'd put on a Dodger jersey, hat and get there early. Oh, and yes, you're right. I'd make sure to get a Dodger dog (or two). •

What's in a Name? Europa Clipper Mission to Jupiter's Moon

Tommy Vinh Bui, MLIS, Associate Librarian, Inglewood Public Library

The outer expanse of space roils and rollicks like a surly sea. And we continue to cast our sights upwards in an earnest attempt to unlock the ever-impregnable mysteries that persistently elude us. The enigma that captures our imagination the most: Are there other planets out there with the potential to support life?

Europa is just one of the many moons of Jupiter and research scientists are detecting evidence that a vast ocean potentially percolates beneath Europa's frigid icy shell. Europa seemingly possesses the essential building ingredients for life such as water, chemistry, and energy. And in 2024, NASA will be sending the Europa Clipper spacecraft on a voyage to seek an answer to the big question: Can it possibly be habitable?

And you, Citizen Scientists, can join the mission and have your name engraved on the spacecraft as it speeds 1.8 billion miles to explore this distant moon that can conceivably support life. This "Message in a Bottle" campaign provides everyone an opportunity to have their name etched onto microchips lugging along US Poet Laureate Ada Limon's handwritten prepared stanzas mounted on the side of the spacecraft. This beacon of optimism and hope hurdling through the vacuum of space is intended to ignite interest in space exploration and allow enthusiasts to participate the world over.

This opportunity lays at the intersection of science, art, and technology and encourages community engagement as we together take the metaphorical pickaxe to the frozen tundra of the unknown. NASA has a long tradition of relaying inspirational messages on spacecrafts as they traverse the inky outer chasms of the solar system. Historical examples include NASA Voyager's Golden Record which contained a time capsule of images and sounds capturing the full biodiversity of life and culture on Earth such as singing humpback whale arias and Azerbaijani traditional folk music. This initiative, too, also sought to inspire and incite wonder around the world and spark further interest in space exploration.

Europa Clipper is currently being cobbled together at the nearby Jet Propulsion Laboratory and is slated to launch in 2030. This indomitable little spacecraft-that-could will log another half-billion miles as it orbits Jupiter and gathers detailed measurements and crucial data on the moon's subsurface ocean, ice crust, and atmosphere using specialized spectrometry and magnetometer instruments.

The conundrum of this moon's geological composition is waiting to be cracked. And the precious data collected can only further our understanding of the possibility of the teeming astrobiological life that might exist on other worlds. The stuff of science-fiction weaved into reality perchance. So let's pursue our curiosity into the cosmos and together inscribe our inquisitiveness onto the stars. • summer camp is free of charge and offers free lunches every day from 12 to 1 p.m.

This summer, you can also build your creative muscle through our diverse range of arts-based classes. Join our intermediate- and advanced-level Mexican Folklore (ballet folklórico) classes. Each session explores the movements and history of the dance style, with instruction offered in both English and Spanish. The City also offers Afro-Fusion dance classes for all ages. Afro-fusion dance offers a connection to the African Diaspora while fostering personal connections and building community around appreciation and kindness. Students are encouraged to explore different types of movement, as well as their own personal and cultural connections to the dance style.
