He May Knock on Your Door

By Ron Sokol

Larry Medler Jr. is good to talk with. He listens well. He is informative and interesting. He is right there. Does not look at his phone. Does not even occasionally drift away. You see, some folks, as you probably would agree, are not so easy to have a dialog with; some simply can't stop looking at their phones or dominating the conversation. It's very nice to hang with someone like Larry, but it is not as if he has a whole lot of spare time.

Larry's dad was a transit bus driver. His mom was an educator. They imbued him with some very fine qualities. A little more background: He grew up in Richmond, a community to the north, but after high school, he followed a friend to Las Vegas. There, he made two discoveries: He truly likes to help people, that is, to do for others. But sadly, he was not on a good path. Then, of all things, the town of Las Vegas - sometimes referred to as "Sin City" - became the place where Larry found an abiding and lasting faith in God, which remains a significant part of his life today.

"I met good people who helped me move in a good direction. And my first job was quite humble -- bussing at a restaurant. In time, I became a Maitre D'. That means I was the one people walked in and spoke with. This was for a very high-end steak house, extremely well respected. One of the finest, let me tell you. It's funny, because some folks were a bit surprised that a black man greeted them there. By the end of the meal, even more would thank me and say, "We'll be back!". I made friends from acquaintances and discovered that the way you treat others can really be a blessing."

Invariably, though, there was a bit of a wrinkle in the fabric: Larry's girlfriend was here in the South Bay. They managed the relationship well, but it was clear that he had a decision to make. Although life in Las Vegas was going well, living apart was not ideal. Well, the decision was made: Larry moved to the South Bay. Today, he, his wife, and family live in Lawndale and have their eyes on Hawthorne, if possible, the Hollyglen neighborhood (he has quite a connection to Hollyglen, as you will read). They have three kids. Each week, Monday and Friday are dedicated Dad days. Mom (Larry's wife) works part-time for the County in an excellent position, but if all goes well, she will, in time, become his partner.

The Importance of the Gap Year

By A.J. Ugliano

How can the argument be made that to be more productive, one must be less productive? To begin the journey of life, to take that first step, people often begin at a college or a university. A standard move, something that is not remotely controversial or otherwise frowned upon. However, how can someone so young, simply starting off in life, make the kinds of choices with lifelong effects that are required of them? Unfortunately, not every student can. There is an importance for such practices. Taking the time before beginning school to learn about oneself and planning to move through it with a plan and a vision for what one would want to receive out of a four-year degree.

In an ode to wanderlust, living, and ouac famously wrote, in his book On the Road, "We were delighted, we all realized we were leaving confusion and nonsense behind performing our one and noble function of our time, move." There is an underappreciated importance to this path of life. And with that, it is something that has been so neglected in modern American society. There has been a complete rejection of allowing young people to figure out what purpose they want to serve in this world, and it has been replaced with a pipeline from primary education straight into higher education. While the importance of such things cannot be understated, the caveat must be given that it is a tool to serve

The Trial of Reality Winner: Hero or Traitor?

By Morgan Rojas for Cinemacy

Former Air Force veteran and NSA contractor Reality Winner was just 25 years old when she was charged under the Espionage Act, facing a decade in prison for leaking a classified document that seemed to prove Russia's interference in the 2016 Presidential election. At the time, then-President Trump vehemently denied any wrongdoing in his quest for the ultimate power position, claiming that any talk of Russia's collusion was just a distraction from his victory. It was a tense time in America, made even more unbearable for Reality as she stared at a document that contradicted everything Trump was saying publicly. Taking matters into her own hands, she made a rushed decision to leak the document. Just as quickly, she was faced with the consequences.

The politically-charged documentarian Sonia Kennebeck (Enemies of the State, National Bird) brings the story of the now 31-year-old Reality Winner back into the public's consciousness in the self-titled documentary, Reality Winner. Executive produced by Wim Wenders, the film is the first official statement from Reality since her release from prison on June 2, 2021. Using intimate, never-before-heard conversations between Reality and her family, Kennebeck crafts a thought-provoking exposé about the risks of whistleblowing, even if acting in good faith on behalf of the country, and begs the question if her actions constitute that of a traitor or a hero.

Throughout the swift 94-minute runtime, Reality recounts the morning of her initial confrontation with FBI agents, her struggle to adjust to prison, and her eventual release and acclimation back into the world post-Covid. Soft-spoken yet unabashedly confident, Reality conducts the sit-down interview in the yard of her parent's home (and who can blame her for wanting to be outside after spending years in a jail cell). Assisting in the storytelling is Reality's mother, Billie Winner-Davis, whose own emotional rollercoaster is a painstaking watch. Through their own words and corresponding verité footage, Reality and Billie's individual experiences over the last five years show an unwavering strength in the midst of a radioactive political climate.

The story of Reality Winner is a fascinating one but we must remember that at the center of it all is a young woman who still struggles to navigate through these uncharted territories. She says as much toward the end of the film by professing she is still battling an uphill fight. She has joined the ranks of previous whistleblowers Chelsea Manning, Thomas Drake, and Edward Snowden, a group she never intended to be part of. While there isn't any "new" information shed on Reality that isn't already accessible on Google, the documentary is still an engaging story and recounts a historic moment in American politics.

Ironically, in June of 2023, Donald Trump was also indicted under the Espionage Act for his possession of classified documents, just like Reality five years prior.

None of This Is True by Lisa Jewell

By Kristen Morell, Librarian I

This month, I am reviewing None of This Is True by Lisa Jewell, New York Times Bestselling author. Alix Summers and Josie Fair are two women who both happen to be celebrating their forty-fifth birthday at a local pub. It turns out they were born on the same day, same year, and even at the same hospital. Josie overhears Alix's friends and family celebrating her birthday and she goes out of her way to bump into Alix in the restroom. It is this chance encounter that starts a wild ride of a relationship between Alix and Josie.

None of This Is True by Lisa Jewell.

Josie is unhappy with her life and her growing curiosity about Alix leads Jose to begin researching Alix. She soon discovers that Alix is a relatively popular podcast host. Alix Summers has a podcast about women and their life stories. Josie thinks her life would make for an interesting podcast episode and soon enough bumps into Alix again, this time outside of her children's school. It is during this second encounter that Josie tells Alix that she would be an interesting subject for her podcast because she is on the "cusp of great changes in her life." Alix is reluctant at first, but gives Josie a chance, after all she feels her podcast needs a change. Alix begins to invite Josie into her life and her home, which she later realizes may have been a terrible mistake. Purchasing Your First Car? Here Are 5 Tips for First-Time Car Buyers.

(BPT) - If you ask anyone you know about purchasing their first car, chances are they'll be able to recount every detail (good or bad) about the car and the process of how they got those keys into their hands. Purchasing a car is oftentimes one of the first major decisions for young adults.

That said, car buying can be a daunting task, especially if you aren't familiar with the process or are overwhelmed by the current auto market. Here are five tips to help you navigate getting behind the wheel of your new car with ease:

1. Take an in-depth look at your finances.

The sticker price of the car is not the only cost you should factor into your budget. Other costs, such as dealership and registration fees, insurance, taxes and just general maintenance, play a big part in your overall affordability of a vehicle. With all of this in mind, you can better figure out how much you'll need to finance the vehicle. There are many tools online to help you get a clearer picture of your budget. For example, Navy Federal Credit Union has online calculators on its website to help members get a sense for what their monthly payments could be, compare loan terms and more.

2. Differentiate between your wants and needs.

With all of this in mind, you'll need to list out your wants and needs in a vehicle. Create a list of non-negotiable items (e.g., number of seats, safety features, rear camera) and another list of nice-to-have features (e.g., keyless entry, navigation system, heated seats). Try to resist add-ons you weren't already planning to get.

With so many vehicles and options to choose from, listing out must-haves and nice-to-haves can help you to avoid overspending while also making sure you get everything that you need out of the vehicle.

3. Look at funding options.

With the prices of both new and used vehicles on the rise, most people will need an auto loan. See what's available in the market - comparing rates and financial options from a dealership and your trusted bank or credit union. Shop around to find the best rate possible. Financial institutions, such as Navy Federal, offer great rates and even pre-approved loans, so you can walk into a dealership with a check in hand just like a cash buyer. On top of that, getting pre-approved gives you more negotiating power since you'll know exactly how much you can reasonably afford to pay each month for your vehicle.

4. Negotiate price before mentioning

If you are looking to get a new car and have vehicle to trade in, negotiate the selling price of the new car first. Don't even mention to the dealer that you have a trade-in until after they draw up a buyer's order for the new vehicle and you see everything you are paying for in total.

If you were to tell them about your trade-in, oftentimes dealers will pad the value of your trade-in to make you think you are getting a better deal than you really are. Then, they will adjust the sales price of the new car to be higher than if you didn't have a trade-in. Make sure to negotiate each separately so one doesn't have a negative influence over the other.

5. Doing your homework gives you purchasing power.

Before making any major financial decision, like buying a car, always do your research. Online resources can be helpful for determining a car's value along with listing safety features and recalls and giving honest dealership reviews so that you have all the information available in your back pocket.

When you're armed with expert knowledge and take the time to prepare, you position yourself to get the best deal possible. • a higher purpose. This pipeline, from high school to college, has been ingrained into the minds of so many, and it has been left there, causing days, months, and years of dismay. Alongside that, there is an incredible amount of debt. All the while, when the dust has settled, after pushing through these trials and tribulations, these people step onto the graduation stage. They walk out onto the stage, waving at the crowd while wearing full academic regalia, still wanting to know their way, searching for their purpose.

What can be done to alleviate this? How can this stress that so many young people feel in their daily lives be prevented? Unfortunately, there is no way to remove the stress of attending a college or university; that much cannot be avoided. However, giving them some time to approach what they want out of it can serve them greatly and allow them to attend with a much greater purpose. So, to alleviate that stress, if not just for a moment, they must be allowed to simply live. Time must pass; they must grow wrinkles on their face from smiling or letting their hair turn a brighter hue from sun exposure, living and traveling, and finding their way and their path. In America, especially in Southern California, a wild and stark emphasis on daily productivity has been made. People from all walks of life are being asked to load more onto their plates, especially young people. For the first time in human history, people must keep up with how productive technology can make them, not the other way around. The age of technology and the capabilities of the quickly moving digital age have trickled all the way down to the earlier levels of primary education, and with that, the emphasis on productivity began.

It cannot be argued that everyone must be productive in their daily lives, financially, in relationships, in personal pursuits, the list goes on. However, it has been observed that there is a significant benefit to something like a gap year. Writing for the Harvard Graduate School of Education's Magazine, Brenden Pelsule writes, "Media debate around gap years typically revolves around economics. Does what's good for the few, the questioning usually goes, come at the exclusion of the many? According to this line of thinking, there are gap-year advocates, like Bob Claggett, Ed. M.'91, who has done studies showing that gap-year alumni outperform their peers in college..." The advocates against something like a gap year would have entirely financial complaints and apprehensions on the subject. The naysayers warn against something as frivolous as time off in this fashion, a foreign concept to many minds. The worries sprouting from this idea cry that it could lead to a lifetime of laziness and being financially behind. And worse yet, something as "detrimental" as the rest of a gap year could throw someone off of their rhythm for an entire lifetime. This, however, is not the case.

The issue with a gap year is the financial cost of it. How does one justify the cost of nothing? To that question, the answer is another question. What is the price tag of memories drifting through the consciousness of a head covered with gray hair? One cannot put a price on them because they are priceless. They are infinitely valuable, especially when they are spent living life to the fullest. Grabbing it by the reins and leaving nothing left unseen or no stone unturned. These frivolous ideas of enjoying life are alien to many. The Puritan work ethic has too greatly gripped its sharp talons into the hearts of many, and the sneering scoffs at something like a gap year is an extension of that.

A gap year, choosing carefully those first steps in life, could set forth a pattern of working to live instead of living to work. It allows someone to decide that they are here for the sake of happiness and enjoyment and personal fulfillment, not an existence based on profit incentives. For there is more to life than the digits on the screen of a bank's website, and far too many young people are the first to seize that truth.

The gap year is an important alternative, a right of passage in modern society. It is a gift of life that few are willing to receive. Many of them, for fear of disappointment from those around them or the deeply ingrained ideas of "being behind" that they would feel if they were to do it. It could lead to a personal shame they would feel for not moving as quickly as they can through life. But by whose metric are they being judged? They should only look to their own wants and desires and decide their own metrics for success. Not everyone can afford to make a million dollars a year, and not everyone needs to. And that is not to say a practice such as a gap year could prevent that.

A soul-searching journey needs to be conducted in the dusk of adolescence, and an unabridged life is the way to do it. There is a particular glow that some have when they walk into a room. A shine on their cheeks, a glint in their eyes that can scream, "I lived," that not many carry around the world with them. It could be the importance of a break between the mundane and often dreary days of high school and the exciting, intricate world of higher education. There is more to see and discuss, and there will be greener trees in the campus foyer and a respect for the gray-haired professor spinning a yarn about their youth that would not otherwise be there if not for something such as a gap year. That is not to say that it wouldn't be there otherwise, but you can increase the chances of such a joy spawning if one takes a moment to live the life they aim to study.

Everyone has a different journey ahead of them. Every individual will make their own trails on the path of life. Kick over different rocks, get lost in different sets of weeds, and find their own wondrous pasture to rest in and watch the simple beauty of life passing around them. The gap year, while something that has been proven to be beneficial, is only for some. However, it is essential to recognize the use of such a thing and allow young people to explore their life and decide with an educated and mature mind what is next for them. •

Larry Medler, Jr.

Larry has a burgeoning residential real estate business as part of the well-known brokerage Berkshire Hathaway HomeServices.

Before real estate, there was the auto industry. Larry studied and applied himself, and things worked out. He felt like he could serve people well, but in time, he grew concerned that integrity (so important to him, so critical to who he is) was not paramount in the industry.

Did I mention Nobu? Not just Nobu but Nobu, Malibu! Larry would drive from the South Bay to Malibu five days a week on a motorcycle. He started as a busser again, but that did not last long. Because of how he conducts himself, Larry soon becomes a Captain or Lead Server. Nobu Malibu is a destination spot, to be sure, with ocean views, celebrities, and pricey and unique foods. He loved the work there, and, in turn, he was loved. Once again, the joy of serving others.

"The one regret I have is the lack of nurturing the many friendships I made while working at Nobu. There are so many good people, but you have family responsibilities, commitments, and plans, and I did not keep in good contact with them. If a Nobu opened up in the South Bay, it would be tempting to work there. With Malibu, driving back and forth on a motorcycle was not the most prudent. I took a deep breath, asked the one on high for guidance, and in 2017 became a real estate licensee.

Keep in mind that I am fearless in talking to people. I know who I am, and I like to engage. I like to reach out. I want to serve, and I want to help. So, I went door-to-door in Hollyglen, in Hawthorne. There are 1,080 properties. The schools are excellent. The neighborhood is, as you may know, very nice. I went door-to-door, and most people answered. I have a particular fondness for serving seniors. Many who live in Hollyglen have been there for quite a few years. A sadness for me is that more and more older people are moving out now to be closer to their kids and grandkids, so when I sell their home, it often means goodbye. Anyway, you cut out. I like being of help, and I have been really fortunate to have some mentors who have guided and encouraged me."

At a time when interest rates have spiked, one upshot is that there are fewer homes on the market. This fact still puts today's home sellers in an advantageous position. Larry seeks to service not just Hawthorne but Lawndale and

Torrance as well. It is very competitive in the real estate field. He has a newsletter, but what has occurred in the past six-plus years is word-of-mouth clientele. I knew about Larry from some Hawthorne friends well before meeting him. He is, not surprisingly, very well-liked.

While conversation with Larry is easy, he is sometimes notably serious, even a bit intense. In his mid-forties, this gentleman is focused on caring for his family, continuing to carve out a niche, and having an impeccable reputation. In sum, Larry Medler Jr. is a dynamo. He has a very positive and outgoing nature. If the South Bay had an official greeter. Larry would be my vote.

If he knocks on your door (he might), if he does, talk with him a bit. You will see what I mean. •
