Yum, Beyond Burger Tastes Great!

By Ron Sokol

One of the great characteristics of our species is the determination to discover, indeed to invent, and by so doing, to try to increase the quality of life here on this mysterious planet, Earth.

Does that sound a bit lofty? Well, consider that scientists believe the first plants on Earth were algae-like and lived in water many, many millions of years ago. Further, it was not until about 150 to 200 million years later that plant life became abundant on land.

"Wait a second, wait... just hold on! I'm hungry. I do not want a lecture. I just want to eat!" said my friend during a recent car ride.

"Yes, you told me that. We are driving to the market, and we are going to buy some Beyond Burgers, come home, and cook them up."

"That's going to take a while. Can't we get them more quickly?"

"Well, okay, we can. Carl's Jr. has Beyond Burgers if you want to go there."

"Fine, let's do that! I repeat: I'm hungry.. okay?"

We drove in silence to Carl's Jr, went in, parked, did not do the drive-through, and each ordered our own version of a Beyond Burger. I can report that my friend was much more relaxed after he finished eating.

Beyond Burgers are plant-based meat. I regret if I am being "professorial" here, but many (I think most) do not know that plant-based meat has a very long history, with evidence that dates back to ancient civilizations. Mahayana Buddhist monks in China, from 206 BC to 220 AD, were known to be dedicated to vegetarianism and developed tofu meat substitutes.

Today, El Segundo is the headquarters of one of the world's leading plant-based food makers, Beyond Meat. The company was founded in 2009, with its first products launched in the United States in 2012. In 2019, Beyond Meat went public and became a public-traded stock on the Nasdaq exchange. It has been a roller coaster; there is a lot of competition, but Beyond Meat is in nearly 14,000 stores nationwide and some 80 countries across the globe.

The most well-known product is the Beyond Burger, which indeed is designed to look, cook, See Beyond Burger, page 5

Invocation, Pledge, and Hope for Good News

October 24th, 2023, and so much going on in the world. Many find it hard to watch the news. Meanwhile, here in the City of Good Neighbors, Hawthorne, California, all City Council members were in attendance for their second scheduled meeting of this tenth month of the year. There is a lot to tend to, and the City has goals; this City wants to do well for its residents and to have good news.

The invocation encouraged all to "make great and wise choices and stay safe." A shout-out was made to the Veterans in attendance for their help and sacrifice. After the pledge of allegiance, the meeting got well underway with State Senator Bradford, who presented what he referred to as "your regular legislative updates." Clearly, he has been very busy and expressed gratitude about 2023 being a productive year for California, with the passage of a $300 billion budget, though unfortunately, at present, there is a deficit of some $30 billion.

"We are working our way through it," said Senator Bradford. "And, kudos to the City Council here in Hawthorne. I know, as a former local official, the challenges you face. This, right here, locally, is where the rubber meets the road" (an expression See City Council, page 4

Lost Souls Connect Over Christmas in The Holdovers

By Morgan Rojas for Cinemacy

At the expense of sounding corny, The Holdovers is a film that truly warms the heart and soul, like the cinematic equivalent of a self-soothing hug by a crackling fireplace. Directed by Alexander Payne (Nebraska, Sideways), Paul Giamatti returns to the big screen in top-tier form as a cranky and out-of-touch professor whose cold heart begins to melt after forging an unlikely connection with a student. The Holdovers is a beautifully told story about the human condition and how understanding an individual's complexity can lead to an empathetic, life-changing awakening.

What one will notice immediately as the film opens is the visual homage to classic cinema of the 1970s. The desaturation and film stock quality make The Holdovers feel as if it is a treasure pulled from the archives of yesteryear. This throwback aesthetic carries on throughout the entirety of the film and is largely responsible for the overall tonal sense of comfort and warmth. The Holdovers doesn't just take place in 1970, Alexander Payne wanted audiences to feel as if the film was made in the time period as well.

Paul Hunham (Giamatti) is an ancient history teacher at Barton Academy, the New England-set boarding school for the upper echelon of privileged society. Paul is a single man, never married, and fiercely devoted to educating his students despite his ill attempts to inspire. His strict style of teaching and less than generous "Christmas gift" to the students of homework over the holiday break makes Paul the most despised professor on campus.

All Paul wants for Christmas is a break from his students but as fate would have it, he is stuck with supervisor duty. This means he is forced to stay on campus and oversee the handful of students who aren't going home for the break, or the "holdovers".

15-year-old Angus Tully (Dominic Sessa) is one of the unlucky boys whose mom and new stepfather refuse to release him from Barton Academy for the holidays. Angus's frustration at the situation grows substantially when, comically, the four other boys who were initially holdovers manage to get released into the care of a friend's wealthy dad. This leaves Angus stuck with Paul and the only other faculty resident on campus, Barton Academy's head cook Mary Lamb (Da'Vine Joy Randolph).

Paul is a self-appointed loner who is forced into a parental role, Angus is a smart kid with bad behavior, and Mary is a caretaker who is navigating through the heartbreak of losing her only son. All three are tortured by their own thoughts and sense of hopelessness and, ironically, their lack of communication in expressing these feelings causes them to miss out on a chance for connection. Despite their many differences, Paul, Angus, and Mary are more alike than they even realize. Over the course of the two-week holiday break, the trio engages in comical misadventures, turbulent growing pains, and emotional catharsis—ultimately leading to the creation of an impromptu family unit that they all so desperately wanted.

The Holdovers feels like an instant classic, anchored by a knockout performance from Paul Giamatti. His pompous, pipe-smoking, historical text-spewing character is not only a riot to watch on screen but also mimics the classic tortoise archetype. He retreats into his

Teen Book Review of Chalice of the Gods by Rick Riordan

By Issac Ingram

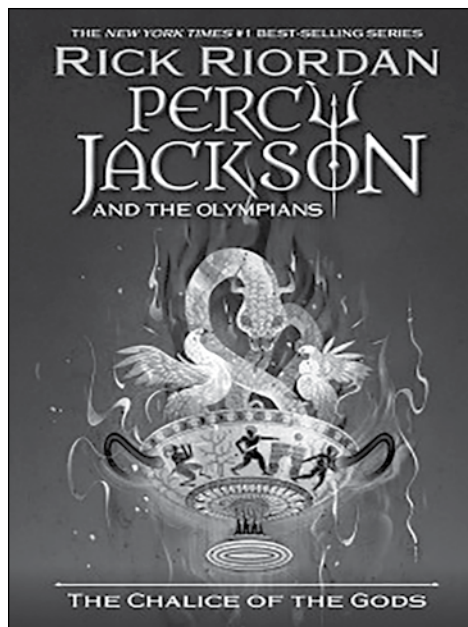

Have you ever read a book by Rick Riordan? He is a well-known author who excels in developing characters and keeping the reader on the edge of every page. He just released a new suspense novel about Percy Jackson titled "Chalice of the Gods." This fantasy/mythology book takes place in the modern world and chronologically falls after the series titled "The Heroes of Olympus," where Percy saves the world from the earth itself, but before the series titled "The Trials of Apollo." In the Trials series, Apollo battles both with Roman emperors and with the fact that Zeus made him human, but he wants to be a God again.

In this new release, Percy Jackson must get a college recommendation letter (ugh, haven't we all heard about this from our parents) from Ganymede, who will only do this in exchange for Percy and his friends retrieving his magic chalice, which was stolen. Read the book to find out who stole the chalice and the path of events Percy and his friends—Annabeth and Grover—had to go through to gain Ganymede's recommendation letter.

This includes the unfortunate events of getting turned into 8-year-olds, being told they have to go to a river full of snakes and being required to sneak into Mount Olympus. One more tantalizing fact, if you are not interested already, is that this golden chalice grants immortality to anyone who drinks from it. Will Percy and his friends be able to resist? Find out, by reading this fabulous new book, Chalice of the Gods!

Check out the ebook from the Libby App, or from the Libby site on our digital library page, www.elsegundolibrary.org/digital-library.

Art Therapy and Dementia

By Lauren Mahakian,
Family Connect Memory Care

In the most severe stage of dementia, 24/7 care is needed, and significant communication issues worsen. The question then is, how do we know how a person with severe dementia is feeling?

Art therapy – which anyone with dementia enjoys - can improve the daily life of a person with dementia and their caregivers. Because art is a form of personal expression, people with severe dementia and extreme challenges communicating can often express their feelings through art, even among those who never had what they consider artistic talent. This is why we developed our proprietary Live Love Art program for our clients with dementia.

One of my favorite art therapy activities starts with photos of someone with dementia alone or with their loved ones. This taps into long-term memory and evokes an emotional response. I then ask how they feel while looking at the photo and encourage them to paint freely, usually with watercolors. Because watercolor is transparent, they may portray deep and complex feelings, even if we don't fully understand them.

Coloring is another great activity, especially if the person with dementia has trouble drawing. Coloring with crayons – whether they stay within the lines or not – is an excellent way to keep them engaged and calm.

Another favorite activity is using modeling clay. It's highly sensory, with the moist, pliable clay squishing between fingers as they work with it. The process is more important than the product. Be sure to ask questions about what they're creating and offer your encouragement.

Making a collage is a fabulous way to tap into a loved one's long-term memory. You can use newspapers, photographs, or magazines, but let your loved one make the collage however they want. It can help trigger some memories, and you may ask them to share, which they may communicate with expression or body language.

Look for inspiration from your loved one's former career if needed. This may bring a sense of satisfaction or fulfillment. Try to understand better what they did when they were working and see if there is any way those former skills are helpful in art therapy. For example, a person may have worked as a landscaper, so do artistic gardening activities. Practice arranging flowers with someone who worked in design. Build models with a loved one who was more technical or hands-on in their career. Get a little creative and try several approaches.

When doing art therapy activities with a person with dementia, keep the activities at an adult level. Treating them as a child can feel demeaning and may have undesired effects that can lead to resistance or agitation. Make the activity social, ask questions about what they're drawing or creating, and ask them to share their thoughts.

Art therapy is a fantastic resource for caregivers of people with severe dementia, but you can also use it with people in all stages of the disease. Remember to look for safe materials, supervise the activity, and remain engaged. Art can resonate with our souls. • he would repeat more than once).

During this past legislative session, Senator Bradford introduced ten bills, of which eight were signed into law (an excellent batting average).

One legislative effort by the good Senator that has drawn a lot of attention is the Ebony Alert. The new law has specific criteria that will trigger an alert for missing persons, ages 12 to 25 (thus a larger age group than for the Amber Alert). The Ebony Alert is the first in the country. Statistics indicate that 38% of missing young people involve persons of color.

Mayor Vargas

Senator Bradford's office is also promoting a food and turkey giveaway on November 2nd, from 10 a.m. to 12 noon at El Camino College. Bottom line, it is clear that Senator Bradford is quite productive and working enthusiastically as his term nears its end.

Jeff Prang then spoke. He is the Los Angeles County Assessor and wants to make sure everyone knows, "I am not the property tax collector..." Mr. Prang's role "is to save money and protect your home." Think of him as a kind of real estate appraiser - what is your property worth? He oversees the largest property assessment agency in the country and evaluates some 2.5 million real property parcels and businesses; of those, 13,096 are parcels in the City of Hawthorne. The inventory and the assessments are critical as a basis for property taxes and as a tool for local government to prepare its budget, along with providing a barometer on the health of the local real estate market. The assessment role (which was closed in June of this year) grew by 111 billion dollars (a 6% increase over 2022). Mr. Prang said the estimate of property values in Los Angeles County is two trillion dollars ("trillion, with a t"), which translates to about 24 billion dollars in property taxes. Hawthorne's contribution includes 5,200 single-family residences, 1,300 apartment complexes, and 638 commercial and industrial properties, which translates to a value of roughly 10 billion dollars. The growth is impressive: 7.6% from the prior year and 74% since 2015. As Mr. Prang stated, or perhaps understated, "This is a strong indication of some of the good development work here!"

Other presentations were made, both thoughtful and of interest. One from the Sanctuary of Hope Youth Program, which strives to assist kids from broken homes, and kids who have no homes. Another was by the Southwest Carpenters Apprentice Program, which has 36 local installations covering 12 states. The Apprentice Program provides an excellent opportunity to learn a trade and to thrive in a wonderful career.

On this occasion, however, more people spoke than usual during the "oral communication" segment of the City Council meeting. The format allows a member of the public to come forward and speak for three minutes, with each address to be to the entire council, not any particular member. Afterward, the speaker can fill out a card, and the council, or its representative will get back to him or her.

Each public member who spoke was sincere and informative. There were three to highlight here. A gentleman spoke about serious issues he feels exist with the red light program in Hawthorne. He is in litigation about it, but offered to reach out to the Council and the City Manager, among others, to try to fix the system, which he described as broken and very risky for the City.

An older woman then came forward who traveled here many years ago, with all of $14, along with two kids to escape an abusive husband. She has run a successful and popular soul food restaurant for years, but sadly, a nearby housing facility for the homeless is causing significant difficulties. To such an extent, she cannot keep her restaurant open as much as she used to. While she expressed empathy for the homeless, she was quite articulate about the need to control the destructiveness that is happening. Items are being stolen from her once bustling restaurant; customers are being harassed at times.

Her presentation was then followed by a fellow who invited Mayor Vargas to tour a portion of North Hawthorne. This gentleman was not related to the woman who had just spoken. Still, he was more vociferous (actually a bit angrier, if you will) regarding his concern and unhappiness about the homeless in his area. He spoke about crime, smells, and disruption. In sum, back-to-back members of the public came forward, asking the council to do more to deal with people experiencing homelessness. It was clear the Council members listened intently. I believe steps will be taken in due course. Hawthorne has been working earnestly to address homelessness, and the work continues. There remains much to do.

The City Council agenda was full, as usual. With just the summary of a portion of the meeting here, we are reminded of the very serious business our public officials must deal with. Unfortunately, it is not always good news. The meeting took several hours.

Leaving tonight's meeting, I thought about the invocation expressed earlier, before the meeting fully got underway: "Make great and wise choices. And stay safe." I said "Amen" under my breath. We all want there to be good news. •

Space Oddities Via Radio Waves: A Citizen Scientist NASA/JPL Opportunity

By Tommy Vinh Bui, MLIS, Associate Librarian, Inglewood Public Library

Most will recall wistful adolescent afternoons spent at the local pizzeria. Between pepperoni and parmesan pauses and planted in front of the claw machine sinking greasy quarter after greasy quarter into the contraption for a chance to win that coveted trinket. A stuffed bear or lobster harmonica or what have you. But little did you know that misspent youth toiling at the controls would be put to good use years later. To the eventual windfall of NASA and space exploration.

The Goldstone Apple Valley Radio Telescope (GAVRT) Astronomy Project is an innovative twenty-year partnership between the Lewis

Center for Educational Research and NASA/JPL. This Citizen Scientist opportunity allows students and educators the world over to remotely operate a thirty-four-meter radio telescope located at NASA's Deep Space Communications Complex in the high desert of California. With a little online training, students can take the helm and calibrate and operate the titanic 110-foot and 500-ton radio telescope via the operators at GAVRT Mission Control. This unique opportunity puts fledgling scientist-in-training right behind the parabolic pointy-tip of this prodigious antennae dish.

Participants will actively collaborate with radio astronomy experts and make observations and significant and ongoing contributions to scientific knowledge and research along with being recognized as a part of the scientist team. Current and ongoing research campaigns include the study of black holes, planetary dynamics, and the monitoring of long-term space probes and active sunspots. Even the ever imagination-capturing search for extraterrestrial life is within the mandate

Blueberry Lemon Overnight Oats

Provided by Campbells Soup Corp.

We love overnight oats, and when you learn to make these overnight oats, you'll love them, too. These easy overnight oats take only 5 minutes to assemble, and this Blueberry Lemon Overnight Oats recipe is a pretty and delicious version. V8 Pomegranate Blueberry adds flavor and a pretty purple color while lemon zest brings a citrus pop. Chia seeds bump up the fiber, making this a good-for-you breakfast that you can customize by topping with your favorite fresh fruit. We like to add blueberries, but strawberries or sliced banana are great, too- or all three! Blueberry Lemon Overnight Oats are a grab-and-go breakfast that you'll feel great about.

Ingredients

- 1 1/3 cups uncooked old-fashioned oats
- 1 cup V8® Blends 100% Juice Pomegranate Blueberry
- 1 container (5.3 ounces) vanilla plant based yogurt
- 1/2 teaspoon grated lemon zest
- 1 teaspoon chia seeds

Directions

- Step 1: Combine the oats, V8, yogurt, lemon zest and chia seeds in a bowl. Cover and refrigerate overnight or for up to 3 days.
- Step 2: Stir before serving and top with fresh blueberries, if desired.

shell when feeling threatened and is extremely vulnerable without his defensive armor. Paul's armor in this case is his intelligence, which is constantly tested by the wilding, unruly, and hare-like Angus. Newcomer Dominic Sessa is a breath of fresh air, acting as if he was somehow plucked from the 70s as well. The authenticity in his performance is incredibly impressive and sets a high bar for any future projects. The consistently wonderful Da'Vine Joy Randolph delivers an award-worthy rendition of a single grieving mother experiencing many emotions at once. She is undeniably phenomenal.

The world of The Holdovers feels so real and tangible, in large part due to the outstanding production design by Ryan Warren Smith which is artfully realized and captured by cinematographer Eigil Bryld. A sweeping and delicately pieced orchestral score by composer Mark Orton—which includes the standard guitar, piano, and strings along with the unexpected addition of a toy trumpet, sleigh bells, and a marxophone—perfectly compliments the abundance of synced songs. Music supervisor Matt Aberle must have had their hands full licensing tracks from Cat Stevens, The Allman Brothers Band, and Labi Siffre among others.

A film to experience with friends and loved ones this holiday season, The Holdovers promises to spread joy and put a smile on the faces of even the most curmudgeonly of people.

The data captured by Citizen Scientists will be analyzed and make a lasting impact on existing research and provide scientists around the world the raw measurements and inputs necessary to crack the ever-elusive code of the universe's origins. As of today, GAVRT has received assistance from six hundred teachers and over fifty thousand students globally. This initiative has a twofold benefit of both imparting valuable skills and knowledge about the scientific method and our solar system and insights into the swirling galaxies above whilst also inspiring students to perhaps pursue future careers in STEM. Purrrfect Companions

Tommy

Kitten Rescue rescues cats and kittens from a variety of situations. Most live in our volunteers' homes and those volunteers foster them until we can find permanent homes for them. Young or old, tabby or Maine Coon, we care for orphaned and abandoned kittens that need to be bottle-fed around the clock, moms with litters, cats that need socialization, and sick or injured animals. When they are finally ready for their forever home, we will help match you with the purr-fect one. When you adopt, you save a life... and in turn enrich your own.

Tommy is an affectionate, curious little adventurer, who loves exploring every nook and cranny of the house. He likes to follow his foster mom around and "assist" her with everything she does. His favorite thing is to play with his foster sister, Callie. Tommy grooms her once they get too tired and need to rest. As soon as you start petting him, he turns into a loud purr machine. Tommy absolutely loves his cat tunnel and crinkle balls, that he sometimes carries around or even plays fetch with them! Tommy is adventurous yet gentle, loving nature makes him a purr-fect companion. Due to his young age, Tommy will need to be adopted together with another kitten or go to a home where there already is a friendly playful cat to keep each other company.

Molly is a sweet and cuddly cat. She enjoys spending her days exploring and playing with her siblings. Molly likes to be pet and shows it by purring instantly. This loving girl will do best in a home with another cat she can spend her days with. Molly would love to be adopted with her sister, Bella, if possible.

Kenny is a darling tuxedo who was found abandoned on the street as a tiny skinny kitten hiding under cars. Kenny was instantly adopted by resident foster kitty Richie who is also available if you are looking for two feline friends. Kenny loves to play with toys, cuddle in bed, sit on your desk while you work and give kitten kisses. He loves his buddy "daddy" one year old Richie who washes, cuddles, plays and sleeps with him. Kenny gets along with other cats and small dogs. He needs either another young cat or kitten to play and socialize properly with Viola is a vivacious and vibrant little girl who is the complete package: sweet, social, playful, extremely soft, and utterly gorgeous.

She is the belle of the ball who loves other cats and they love her. She also adores humans. While she enjoys toys (tunnels in particular), Viola much prefers playing with other cats (especially their tails!) and being an affectionate shadow to her humans. Some of Viola's favorite things include: laying on her back for belly rubs, being kissed and held like a baby, zoomies, being goofy and making humans laugh, perching on top of cat trees. Due to her young age and love of feline friends, Viola will need to be adopted with another kitty or go to a home that already has a young playful cat.

Looking for a lively and fearless addition to your family? Lucky is the epitome of spunk, high energy, curiosity, and bravery – a bundle of feline enthusiasm waiting to bring excitement into your life! He is a thrill-seeker with boundless energy. Whether he is boldly investigating new spaces or engaging in spirited play, Lucky is always up for a good time. Give Lucky the loving home he deserves, and let the thrilling entertainment begin.

These cats and kittens are available for adoption through Kitten Rescue, one of the largest cat rescue groups in Southern California. All our kitties are spayed/neutered, microchipped, tested for FeLV and FIV, dewormed and current on their vaccinations. For additional information to see these or our other kittens and cats and for a list of our weekend adoption events, please check our website www.kittenrescue.org.

The donations and support we receive from individuals like you, who share our love and commitment to helping cats and kittens in Los Angeles, are the sole reason we are able to do what we do. We are grateful for your financial help. By making even a small donation today, you can touch the lives of the many deserving, wonderful animals in our care. There are many ways you can donate and help, and every dollar means so much. Kitten Rescue is a 501(c)(3) nonprofit. Your tax-deductible donations for the rescue and care of our cats and kittens can be made through our website or by sending a check payable to Kitten Rescue, 3519 Casitas Ave., Los Angeles, CA 90039.

Saving one animal won't change the world, but the world will surely change for that animal. •
